The manifold problems of Hospitals and of Supplies Officers and Matrons have been studied by J. H. Bounds Ltd. for many years. A Service has been developed which for intimate knowledge of Hospital needs can hardly be rivalled. J. H. Bounds Ltd. would be privileged to send their Consultant Specialists to any Regional Hospital Board or Management Committee to discuss uniforms and Hospital textiles. A wide range of exclusively designed uniforms is available for inspection. Patterns, samples and prices supplied on application.

Hospital staff, always busy, always pushed for time, are thankful when a thoughtful administration introduces MAGRINI electrically-heated food conveyors. Providing piping hot meals for 10-50 patients per ward, an efficiently insulated MAGRINI keeps its temperature with no noticeable drop for ONE HOUR after disconnection—the last patient served in the most outlying ward receives a meal as hot as when it leaves the kitchen! Long-life elements ensure absolute efficiency and maximum economy — and silent, trouble-free action and light Birmabright construction make MAGRINI conveyors so easy to push around!

The name of MAGRINI is the hallmark of efficiency for a range of time- and labour-saving equipment. Full details from:—

EDITOR'S FOREWORD

THE format and contents of this edition of the YEAR BOOK substantially follow the same lines as those of the previous edition. In particular the arrangement initiated in that edition whereby Sections 4, 5 and 6 provide a general directory of the national health service hospital authorities and their hospitals, and detailed bed and patient statistics relating to those hospitals are given separately in Section 8, has again been followed. Such disadvantages as there may be in this separation of information do not appear to have been unduly felt, but to such extent as they exist the endeavour has again been made to offset them by giving cross references from the relevant directory section to the statistical one, and also by differentiating references to them in the indexes to hospitals and hospital authorities.

Certain minor changes have been made in the bed and patient statistics now presented, these being consequent upon changes made in the statistical returns required by the central departments from hospital authorities. Since the statistical information demanded from Scottish authorities differs from that required in England and Wales, it has again not been possible to provide the information given for Scottish hospitals on the same basis as that for those in England and Wales.

As regards the other sections of the YEAR BOOK every endeavour has been made to bring them as fully up-to-date as possible. A number of changes, designed to increase their usefulness, have been made, but in general scope and content they correspond to those of the previous edition. In this connection it may be added that I am conscious of having received many suggestions for the inclusion of additional matter in the YEAR BOOK which have not been acted upon. The desire to be as comprehensive as possible must, however, be reconciled with the need to keep such a work as this within manageable proportions, both from the point of view of those using it and of its production. In the latter respect it may be noted that any substantial addition to the contents must of necessity increase the time required for printing and therefore the period between publication and the date to which information given in the YEAR BOOK refers. As far as possible, therefore, the temptation to add to the present scope of contents has been avoided.

This editorial note would again not be complete without an expression of my grateful appreciation to those officers of the Ministry of Health, the Department of Health for Scotland, the Regional Hospital Boards, Boards of Governors, Hospital Management Committees and Boards of Management, who so readily afforded their assistance and co-operation in making available information for this volume. My thanks are no less due to the officers of the Ministry of Pensions and other Government departments, the Northern Ireland Hospitals and Tuberculosis Authorities, and those of the many other bodies and organisations who have equally readily supplied information.

THE HOSPITAL SERVICE

Progress and Problems

BY THE EDITOR

SINCE the last edition of the YEAR BOOK the searchlight of public interest in the hospital service has continued very largely to be focused on its cost, and within the service itself the subject of finance, in one aspect or another, has continued to loom very large in all discussion relating to its development and administration. While this is understandable, and indeed inevitable, it would be unfortunate if this concentration of interest upon cost and financial problems was allowed to obscure the achievements which the national hospital service, in the comparatively short space of four years, has already to its credit.

In the first place there has been provided, not merely on paper, but substantially in practice, a unified and co-ordinated hospital service, organised on a coherent regional and district plan, and without administrative barriers to treatment. Only four years afterwards it is all too often forgotten that no such thing, but rather the very contrary, existed prior to 5th July, 1948, and few could have anticipated how rapidly the former voluntary and public authority services would have effectively welded into one service. Secondly, flowing from this unification of services, there has been achieved a better and more even distribution of specialist skill throughout the country, together with a considerable expansion of specialist services. In many areas specialist services now exist where there were none before, and quantitatively there has been a substantial total increase. In, for example, one of the previously more deficient regions—the Newcastle region—in the three years 1948-51, the specialist and registrar staffs expanded “from about 35 per cent. to about 70 per cent. of that required for a first-class hospital service”.¹ Thirdly, this better distribution and expansion of specialist services has by the nature of things been accompanied by improved distribution and improved standards of hospital facilities generally. The accommodation, equipment and staffing of many hospitals have been improved. Patients’ wards have been renovated and modernised; new X-ray, pathological, and other special departments have come into being; out-patient departments have been improved and extended; geriatric services have been developed; catering standards have been raised; greater nursing care is provided; and almoners’ services exist where there were previously none. To say this, it is to be stressed, is not to imply that the standard of hospital care has everywhere risen, but it is beyond doubt that over the country as a whole the general standard has improved.

Fourthly, in addition to improved standards, existing resources have been put to better use, and partly as a result of this, partly also through the provision of some new accommodation, and partly through increases in medical, nursing, domestic and other staff, the extent of hospital provision as a whole has been extended. The better utilisation of existing resources has been notably reflected in the concentration of accommodation for infectious diseases and the adaptation of accommodation which has been freed as a result for use for tuberculosis. Former E.M.S. hospitals, too, have been developed as fully equipped modern general hospitals, as for example the Frenchay Hospital, Bristol, while new accommodation has included maternity and geriatric units, special units, such as the pneumoconiosis unit at Bangour Hospital, West Lothian, and hostels for ambulant patients, as established, for example, at Liverpool for patients attending the Liverpool Radium Institute — a development which also provides a means of saving acute beds. Other new accommodation has included nurses' homes and preliminary training schools for nurses.

Statistically these developments are reflected in the increase of hospital beds which are staffed and available for use. According to Ministry of Health returns, the total of such beds in England and Wales showed an increase of some 40,000 in the three years between 31st December, 1948 and the same date in 1951. In Scotland the total of beds staffed and available for use at 31st March, 1951, was 60,885, or some 1,700 more than in 1948. In respect of nursing staff there has been an increase of some 21,000 full-time and nearly 9,000 part-time nurses in England and Wales between 5th July, 1948 and 31st December, 1951, the total nursing and midwifery staff of hospitals at the latter date being 166,000. Domestic staff in the same period in England and Wales increased from 100,000 to 107,000 full-time and from 21,000 to 30,000 part-time workers.

The progress made under the national service in improving and extending hospital and specialist care has thus been substantial, particularly when viewed against the background, on the one hand, of the hospital services as they existed prior to 1948, and on the other, of the extremely limited allocation of resources to the service for capital development. Yet, despite the increase in the number of available beds and other facilities it remains that hospital provision generally still falls far short of the demand for it, that in particular spheres the shortage is extremely serious, and that aside from the question of accommodation there is much scope for improvement in standards of efficiency and service to the patient.

Provision for Mental Health

Among the most pressing problems of hospital provision is that of mental hospital and mental deficiency institution accommodation. There was already before the last war a considerable shortage of beds for mental illness, and since then the problem has been aggravated by the growth of population and increased longevity. Some 1,340 pre-war beds in mental hospitals used for other purposes during the war remain diverted to other uses, while a further 1,700 which were similarly diverted still await reconditioning and re-equipping before they can be brought into use. In addition some 2,800 beds are closed for lack of staff. The results of this are that to-day mental hospitals are everywhere overcrowded—in some cases to such an extent that it is reported that there are patients not only in the beds, but also on mattresses on the floor between beds—and in all but two hospital regions in England and Wales restrictions have had to be imposed upon the admission of voluntary patients. The gravity of this situation can scarcely be over-stressed. It is the voluntary patient who comes forward for treatment at an early stage of illness who is most likely to respond to treatment and whose chances of complete recovery are greatest. The inability of the hospital to admit such patients is, therefore, tragic, not only from the point of view of the individual but from that of the community, and in addition to other results it must have a detrimental effect on the picture which has been laboriously built up in the public mind of the mental hospital as a place of healing rather than of custody. The recruitment of nurses' too, is obviously made the more difficult by the existence of these overcrowded conditions.

In mental deficiency institutions there is also serious overcrowding. Some 400 beds await reconditioning and re-equipment before they can be brought into use and a further 2,100 beds are closed for lack of staff. Even if, however, all these beds became available for use there would still be left a waiting list of several thousands—this on the basis of official waiting list figures which most certainly do not reflect the real needs for institutional care. In this connection one may recall that the Wood Committee of 1929 estimated that nearly 100,000 mental defectives needed institutional care. To-day there is provision for about 55,000.

There are, it should be noted, more than 5,000 mental defectives who are occupying beds in mental hospitals. If these defectives could be transferred to mental deficiency institutions and if also the elderly senile cases not in need of specialist care—growing in number and approaching 20 per cent. of the mental hospital population—could be removed to long-stay annexes as recommended by the Ministry of Health, the problem of mental hospital accommodation would be much relieved—but obviously neither of these things can be done without considerable new capital expenditure.

To shortage of accommodation is added the problem, both in the case of mental hospitals and mental deficiency institutions, of acute shortage of nursing staff. As already noted many existing beds cannot be used for lack of staff, but in addition to this the number of nurses at most mental institutions is seriously below that necessary adequately to staff the beds actually in use. Although since 1948 there has been some increase in the recruitment of nurses to the mental health service it has fallen far below the requirements of the situation. In 1938 the Departmental Committee on the Cost of Hospitals expressed the view that a ratio of one nurse to every 4.5 patients was required in mental hospitals and one to every six patients in mental deficiency institutions. These ratios may be regarded as minimum acceptable standards; but at 31st March, 1950, the ratio of patients to nurses in England and Wales was 7.4 for female and 5.4 for male patients in mental hospitals and 6.6 for female and 8.2 for male patients in mental deficiency institutions.

This position, it was officially stated,¹ "was one which gave rise to anxious thought not only because the overall shortage was being progressively aggravated by the loss of trained and experienced staff through normal wastage, but also because the continuance of the service even at its present level is only possible by the use of less trained persons and by the very substantial use of part-time nurses".

There is no reason to believe that the position has improved over the past year, and to the effects, therefore, of the curtailment of admissions of patients is added the further danger of a serious fall in the standards of care of those whom the hospitals are able to admit. A primary and most urgent task in the sphere of mental health is thus the recruitment of a greatly increased number of nurses. It is easier to state the task than to suggest how it is to be accomplished. It may be that the whole question of mental nurse training and qualifications requires re-examination, but whatever is done in that regard, it must be suggested that no substantial and permanent increase of mental nurses is likely to be achieved without further improvements in pay and conditions of service and a substantial overhaul in many hospitals of living conditions and amenities.

It must be questioned whether these problems of shortage of staff and of accommodation in the mental health service have been tackled with all the urgency and energy which they demand, and within the mental health service itself there is strong feeling that it has not been getting a fair deal in the allocation of hospital service resources. These views seem to have been shared by the Ministry of Health, for in August, 1951, regional hospital boards were very pointedly told by the Ministry that their planning on the mental side, as reflected in their estimates for 1951-52, was "quite incommensurate with the needs of the situation". The boards were accordingly asked to review critically the position in respect of mental hospital and mental deficiency institution provision and to frame their estimates for 1952-53 to ensure that additional accommodation for mental patients would become available on an appreciable scale within the next two or three years, even, if necessary, by some reduction or postponement of proposed capital expenditure in other branches of the service. There is evidence that the boards have taken note of the admonition, but it is too early yet to assess results.

The Care of the Elderly Sick

Another problem, already acute, and of growing social consequence is that of the care of the elderly sick. At the present time rather less than 15 per cent. of the population in Great Britain consists of people of pensionable age, i.e. men over 64 and women over 59. By 1971 it is estimated that the proportion will have increased to over 20 per cent. The problem of the elderly sick is, however, likely to grow even more than these figures would suggest by reason of accelerating longevity and a higher incidence of chronic sickness.

The growing nature of the problem may be illustrated by reference to bed requirements. A commonly accepted estimate of the bed requirements for the chronic sick is 2.5 per thousand of the population, being 2 per thousand for the elderly chronic sick and 0.5 per thousand for younger cases. On this basis the number of beds at present required in England and Wales is about 119,000, but in 1971, even discounting a higher incidence of chronic sickness, the number will be about 158,000, of which more than 136,000 will be for the elderly. These figures may be compared with the present total of 55,000 hospital beds for the chronic sick.

Too much stress must not be placed on such figures, but they serve to emphasise the growing acuteness of the problem of providing care and treatment for the elderly sick, and, from the hospital's point of view, of doing so without blocking large numbers of beds which would be otherwise available for the acute sick. The problem is not rendered the easier by already existing shortages of beds and nurses, by the insufficiency of other forms of care and assistance for the old, by housing difficulties and by a changing attitude towards family responsibility for the elderly. The problem of the elderly sick, it should be stressed, is not one for the hospital alone. It is in fact but one aspect of the problem of the care of old people in the community, and if it is to be successfully tackled it must be treated as such, i.e. as a community problem involving the close co-operation of hospital authorities, local authorities and voluntary organisations. The provision of suitable domestic accommodation and assistance, including home help and home nursing, the provision of residential homes of varying types, and the provision of geriatric services based on the hospital are all essential elements.

So far it may be doubted if the approach to the problem has been either sufficiently broadly based or dynamic enough. There has as yet been all too little co-operation between the various bodies concerned, and within the hospital service the development of geriatric services has been limited. Excellent geriatric units exist at a number of individual hospitals, but there is need not merely for such units to be developed in other hospitals, but for them to be expanded to provide a comprehensive geriatric service on an area basis, comprising acute admission units, remedial units, long-stay annexes, and a domiciliary consultant service, and closely linked with local authority and voluntary services. At the present time there are obvious difficulties in the way of developing such services, but progress already made in some regions indicates that a great deal can be done despite them. Shortages of material and man-power resources are, indeed, cogent incentives to develop services which will keep the elderly out of bed as long as possible, get them back to the community as soon as possible, and prevent them from becoming chronic cases.

Convalescent Facilities

The unsatisfactory state of convalescent facilities under the National Health Service has been another subject of growing concern and in August, 1951, a report¹ published by King Edward's Hospital Fund for London gave statistical support to this concern.

On the basis of statistics calculated by nineteen London hospitals, the report showed that 20 per cent. of in-patients recommended for convalescence waited an average of eight days in hospital after being fit to transfer to a convalescent home. Further, out of 4,436 recommendations for admission to convalescent homes, a figure of 2,790 or 65.8 per cent. of admissions had to wait either in hospital or at home, or sometimes for part of the time in each, although in every case application was made in ample time, and no wait was due to a late application for convalescence. The average wait after application experienced by these 2,790 patients was $12\frac{1}{2}$ days. Apart from delays in hospital, in which case beds are wasted, it is undesirable in the extreme for patients living in unsuitable home conditions to return home between hospital treatment and convalescence. As the report pointed out, this is particularly the case with women, who, if they return home, frequently take up the burden of household duties without assistance and as a result their recovery is retarded, or worse, a relapse is caused. Another result of delay in securing admission to a convalescent home is that it causes many patients to give up the idea of convalescing altogether. There are inevitably many cases where patients are unable to stay away from work and afford the time to wait for admission to a convalescent home without losing their jobs. Accordingly once they are home they give up the idea of convalescence and instead, return to work, feeling perhaps just well enough to do so, but in many cases before they are completely fit, and in the long run their health and work must suffer.

Most of the difficulties which have arisen in respect of convalescence can be traced to the classification of convalescence homes under the legislation of 1946. In the National Health Service Act, 1946, it is stated in Section 79 that any "institution for the reception and treatment of persons during convalescence" is considered to be a "hospital" within the meaning of the Act and therefore to be transferable to the Minister, whilst under Section 28 of the Act local health authorities have power to provide for those requiring "little or no more than, rest, good food, fresh air, and regular hours". So far as concerns the hospital service, therefore, the designation of a home as being within the scope of Section 79 depends upon whether "treatment" is available there, and a narrow interpretation of what constitutes "treatment" led in the first instance to many less convalescent homes being acquired by the service than was at one time anticipated.

Apart from the circumstance that the regional hospital boards have not directly acquired a sufficient number of convalescent homes to provide an adequate service, difficulties have been increased by the fact that these authorities have been encouraged to make contractual arrangements with those non-transferred homes which provide regular medical supervision and nursing care, by which such homes accept a number of patients from the regional boards on a payment basis. This practice has led to a tendency for regional boards to insist that their own homes are filled before "contractual" beds are used which, as the King's Fund Report says, often means that a patient is sent to a home which the almoner considers unsuitable for him and where the best results are not obtained. Even more to be condemned is the practice whereby a waiting list for state homes is maintained to ensure full occupancy, even although there are more suitable beds in voluntary "contractual" homes. There have also been instances reported where a patient has been refused admission to a home because all "contractual" beds are full, but is at the same time offered admission to the same home if he will pay the fees himself.

Besides the conflicts caused by the existence of the two types of convalescent home to which patients can be sent through the regional hospital boards there remains the distinction between convalescent and recuperative holiday homes run under arrangements made by local health authorities. The distinction is often very thin on the treatment side, but substantially severe on the financial side. The nursing staff in many recuperative holiday homes is similar to that found in convalescent homes with contracts with the regional hospital boards and adequate attention is usually available for patients recently out of hospital. The assignment of a patient to one type of home or another by the almoner depends upon whether the doctor says that "nursing care and attention" is or is not required after the patient leaves hospital. Where such attention is stated to be required the patient is eligible for admission to a convalescent home as a regional hospital board patient, and as such receives free convalescence. If, however, it is not then the patient is only eligible for admission to a recuperative holiday home as a local health authority patient, this irrespective of the almoner's view as to which kind of home is that at which the patient is likely to derive most benefit from his convalescence, and is required to pay for it. It is perhaps not surprising that since it is often almost impossible to draw a dividing line between types of patient and since the responsibilities of regional boards and local health authorities in the matter are not at all clearly defined, there have been instances of patients having their convalescence delayed while these two bodies decided who should bear the financial responsibility.

One cannot but conclude that there is need for an extension of convalescent provision and that so far as existing accommodation is concerned there is very much wrong in the present arrangements, which lead to waste in almost every direction—waste of time of hospital staff, particularly almoners, who have to endeavour to get patients into the right homes at the right time; waste of beds when patients are kept in acute beds long after they should be in a convalescent home; waste of a cure when convalescent facilities cannot be found for the patient and he has to go home without completing the cure; and waste of confidence on the part of the patient when he contemplates this absurd dual system whereby one patient can have free convalescence and another with precisely the same complaint and case history has to pay for it under the camouflaged title of "recuperative holiday." There is surely need for an overhaul of these unsatisfactory arrangements.

Hospital provision for tuberculosis has continued to increase over the past year, and by 31st March, 1952, some 6,850 new beds had been opened and 3,870 re-opened since July, 1948, of which 761 were opened during 1951, and 382 were re-opened in the twelve months preceding 31st March, 1952. At the same time nursing staff has also been increased, some 2,235 additional nurses (of which 1,680 were full-time) having been recruited to sanatoria and tuberculosis hospitals since July, 1948, of which 165 (74 being part-time) were recruited in the year ending 31st March, 1952. The waiting list for beds fell from a figure of over 10,000 in 1950 to just over 7,000 by the end of 1951.

Problems of hospital provision for tuberculosis were discussed in the last edition of the YEAR BOOK and it is not proposed to review them again here. It must suffice to stress that notwithstanding increases in beds and nursing staff, and the continued decrease in tuberculosis mortality and also in the notifications of new cases—notably welcome in the case of Scotland—tuberculosis remains a problem of the first magnitude for the hospital service. In addition to a gross deficiency of beds, there are still some 2,500 empty beds, and the immediate need remains that of securing more nurses.

The provision of hospital facilities is, however, but one aspect of the tuberculosis problem, and as was stressed in the last report² of the Chief Medical Officer, if further substantial progress is to be made it is essential that all anti-tuberculosis forces should be co-ordinated.

"The family must be regarded as the unit and the chest clinic as the pivot of the scheme. Prevention, treatment and control are links in a chain and success cannot be hoped for unless every link is strong in itself and firmly joined to its fellows. General practitioner, medical officer of health, chest physician, paediatrician, and thoracic surgeon all have their parts to play in the management of this infectious disease which, insidious in onset and tending to run a chronic course, does most harm among the age-groups that contribute most to the productive capacity of the nation."

Unfortunately it is not yet true that this lesson has everywhere been absorbed. With the present threefold division of responsibilities for the provision of health services, it is inevitable that problems of liaison and co-operation should arise from time to time. It would seem clear, however, that in some areas the tuberculosis service has suffered unduly from a lack of co-operation between hospital and local health authorities. One aspect of this was referred to in the annual report for 1950-51 of the National Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis which commented:

"Overcrowding and poor housing conditions hamper the medical officer of health, but worse even than this is the mental attitude sometimes encountered, that his work is less important than that of his medical colleague who treats cases."

Increasing criticism of the lack of co-operation caused the Ministry of Health to issue a circular on the subject to hospital authorities in April, 1952. In this concern was expressed at the lack of co-operation in some areas between chest clinics and local health authorities, the greatest difficulty being a reluctance on the part of some chest physicians in charge of clinics to work in full co-operation with medical officers of health, particularly with regard to the provision of information required by the former. A further cause of complaint has been the failure of some chest physicians to take sufficient interest in the preventive and after-care aspects of tuberculosis work, the suggestion being that they have been pre-occupied to the exclusion of these aspects with clinical work.

Co-ordination of Services

This problem of securing the effective co-ordination of services for which administrative responsibility is divided is not, as has already been indicated in this article, one peculiar to the tuberculosis service. It exists also in the fields of mental health, the care of the elderly sick, and of maternity and child welfare.

As the recent report of the committee of the Central Health Services Council which has been examining this problem has stressed, the vast size of the National Health Service, which is the third largest concern in the country, the variety of services it provides and the number of people it employs, together with the fact that its complicated structure is partly the result of historical influences, make the problem of co-operation between the various authorities a highly complex one. Among complicating factors is the fact that bodies which are outside the Act are nevertheless concerned with certain aspects of its working, e.g. the universities have a special relation to regional boards and boards of governors, and the local health authority services are carried out in the main by the same bodies—the county and county borough councils—as carry out the local welfare services under the National Assistance Act. The greatest difficulties in the way of adequate liaison lie, however, in the involved geographical pattern of overlapping and intersecting boards, committees, local health authorities and executive councils, which makes it very difficult for any one authority to be, as the report puts it, conscious of its "opposite number".

Viewing these circumstances the Central Health Services Council committee very rightly stresses that perfect co-ordination is not to be expected. On the other hand there is patently need for closer co-operation and a better integration of services than at present exists. To this end the Central Health Services Council committee has suggested the establishment at a local level of joint consultative committees, representative of the local hospital management committees, the executive councils (together with the local medical committees) and of the local health authorities. Although something of this nature already exists in one or two regions, it remains to be seen how far the suggestion will commend itself to an already over-committee-ridden hospital service. It would seem that a less formal liaison machinery of regular meetings between officers and practitioners in the services would offer better prospect of success.

Financial Administration

There are few hospital problems not affected by financial considerations, and not only has much development had to be restricted owing to such considerations, but rising expenditure in a period of growing financial stringency has, amongst other things, had a considerable effect on the pattern of administration of the hospital service.

As the service was originally planned it was clearly envisaged that, subject on the one hand to the over-riding authority and financial control of Parliament, and on the other, to the needs of regional planning and organisation of services, there should be the greatest possible decentralisation of authority. This decentralisation of authority was to extend to the financial as well as general administration of the service, and hospital management committees as well as regional hospital boards were to be entrusted with powers of spending within approved "global budgets". As late as 1949, the then Minister of Health reiterated this concept, stating:—

"As I understand and envisage the operation of the administration of the hospital system . . . we shall have global budgets determined for the regional hospital boards and the management committees of hospitals. . . . Within these global budgets the management committees will have discretion to spend what they wish on this and that item of administration. If they spend more on one, they spend less on another."

In practice the service has never been operated on this concept. Hospital management committees have never had global budgets, and there has never been real decentralisation of administrative authority, but rather a growing centralisation. In particular the effect of rising hospital expenditure in the economic circumstances of the time was for long to encourage an increasing rigidity of financial control, so that by 1951 the administration of the service was characterised by an attempted system of controls, reports, cross-checks, inspection and surveillance, quite alien to any concept of decentralisation of authority.

Over the past year some improvement in this situation has taken place. In August, 1951, much needed changes were made in the system of estimates.

A more realistic time-table for the submission and approval of estimates by committees and boards was instituted and the whole procedure of estimates simplified. This was followed in March, 1952, by further changes, whereby regional boards have now become wholly responsible for approving the estimates of management committees, which have no longer to be submitted also to the Ministry for approval, and the power—originally conferred in 1948 and then later taken away—has been restored to the boards of authorising transfers of expenditure under approved sub-heads by committees. At the same time the futile and money wasting procedure of management committees having to send copies of monthly returns of expenditure to the Ministry has been abolished—they still, however, are required to submit such statements to the regional board.

There has thus been over the last year a welcome change towards some greater flexibility in the financial administration of the service. The changes will not, however, affect the process which has been steadily going on since 1948 whereby the regional hospital boards, who—although their functions were never very closely defined—were originally envisaged as primarily medical planning authorities, have more and more become administrative bodies, increasingly concerned with the control of management committee expenditure and, inevitably, also with the general conduct and detail of local administration. Clearly it would be quite wrong to suggest that it was never intended that the regional boards should have any powers of direction and interference with management committees. As planning authorities they must have powers to ensure that their plans are put into operation and to determine the allocation of hospital resources within their areas. That, however, is a very different thing from concerning themselves with the detail of the management committees' administration and maintaining a meticulous control of their expenditure. The extent to which this process has gone is very clearly illustrated in the sphere of staffing, where management committee establishments are now rigidly determined and no alterations to the "approved establishment" may be made except with the sanction of the regional board.

It is no doubt in accord with British practice for administrative machinery to develop empirically. Nevertheless, in viewing this change of emphasis in the functions of the regional boards it must be noted, first, that their composition and staffing and, in particular, the areas for which they were established, were determined on the basis of the boards' primary functions being that of medical planning. There is no reason to suppose that the composition, staffing and areas that were correct for the boards as essentially medical planning authorities are necessarily equally correct for them as administrative bodies. If in fact the boards are to continue to function as administrative bodies to the extent to which they have become, then experience already suggests the need for changes in the areas of some of them, while in the field of staffing it must be considered a strange feature for an administrative authority to remunerate its technical advisers far more highly than either its business manager or its chief accounting officer. Secondly, the fact that the regional boards have become more and more administrative bodies means of necessity that more and more of their time and energies are taken up by discussion of administrative matters and they have the less time and energy to devote to medical planning and organisation. There must at least be the suspicion that some of the current problems of hospital provision would have been the subject of more resolute action but for the increasing concentration upon administrative detail.

This changed emphasis in the functions of the regional boards necessarily adds to the cost of regional administration. It may be said that this is offset by savings achieved as a result on local hospital expenditure, but it is surely questionable whether the setting up of the regional boards as watchdogs of the day-to-day expenditure of management committees constitutes the basis of a sound system of financial administration, a first essential of which is surely that there should be a real sense of financial responsibility on the part of the local spending authority. The changes of the past year have done nothing to provide this. The regional boards now receive a global sum for allocation to management committees, but the procedure stops there, and management committees remain without positive encouragement to concern themselves with economy and efficient financial administration. Now that in fact devolution of financial authority has been achieved to the extent of global allocations at the regional level, there is no good reason why it should not be extended to the management committee level.

Such devolution of financial autonomy within the bounds of a global allocation to management committees is a step which could be taken immediately. It entails no new legislation, and, indeed, would constitute but a reversion to the original concept of decentralised authority upon which the service was founded, but which has never yet been put into operation. A more fundamental change would be the institution of a system of financing the service by means of a block allocation of money spread over a number of years, with corresponding allocations within the service itself. While this proposal is still a matter of some controversy there are now few competent observers who do not agree that the ultimate institution of such a system is essential to provide the service with a requisite degree of flexibility in its financial administration. The need, it may be added, is especially cogent in respect of capital expenditure

NOTES ON DIRECTORY

Officers of Hospital Management Committees

The addresses of these officers are given in full except where they are at a hospital included in the group, in which case reference should be made to the list of hospitals for address and telephone details. If the telephone number for the officers is not that of the hospital it is given individually for each officer. Where the address is not at a hospital, the telephone number is given only for the secretary, unless the other officers have individual numbers.

Senior Officers at Individual Hospitals

The senior officers at individual hospitals whose names are given and the order in which they are always listed are as follows :—

- 1. Senior non-medical administrative officer, whose name (except when the post is an honorary one) is never followed by any indication of title.
- 2. Medical superintendent, whose name is always followed by the abbreviation (Med. Supt.) or a variant such as (Med. officer-in-charge).
- 3. Matron, whose name is followed by an indication of title, i.e. (Matron), only when no other officers are given for the hospital concerned.

Where additionally the name of the chief male nurse is given it is always followed by the full title in brackets.

Bed Complement

The number of beds shown against each hospital is the total bed complement at 31st December, 1951. The page reference after each hospital management committee is to the details of bed and patient statistics which are given in Section 8.

The type of each hospital is given in the “Notes” column except where it is indicated in the name of the hospital.

Closed and Transferred Hospitals

Where a hospital has been closed, or transferred to another hospital management committee, since 31st December, 1951, this is indicated in this Directory, but for bed statistics of transferred hospitals reference must be made in Section 8 to the hospital management committee to which the hospital belonged on 31st December, 1951.

I always use Cream Suds

because it cleanses thoroughly, saves
washing time!

As matron of a large hospital I know how important cleanliness and speed are.

Cream Suds gets the wash really clean and white, and because you don't have to prepare stock solutions beforehand, it saves time too. Fed straight to the wash-wheel, Cream Suds gives an extra 5 effective minutes in every hour of washing time; this means that you get even greater cleanliness for the same amount of effort, and your staff can handle more work. No wonder so many hospitals need Cream Suds.

NOTES ON DIRECTORY

Officers of Boards of Governors

The addresses of these officers are given in full except where they are at a hospital included in the group, in which case reference should be made to the list of hospitals for address and telephone details. If the telephone number for the officers is not that of the hospital it is given individually for each officer. Where the address is not at a hospital the telephone number is given only for the secretary, unless the other officers have individual numbers.

Senior Officers at Individual Hospitals

The senior officers at individual hospitals whose names are given and the order in which they are always listed are as follows :—

1. Senior non-medical administrative officer, whose name (except when the post is an honorary one) is never followed by any indication of title.
2. Medical superintendent, whose name is always followed by the abbreviation (Med. Supt.) or a variant such as (Med. officer-in-charge).
3. Matron, whose name is followed by an indication of title, i.e. (Matron), only when no other officers are given for the hospital concerned.
- Where additionally the name of the chief male nurse is given it is always followed by the full title in brackets.

Bed Complement

The type of each hospital is given in the "Notes" column except where it is indicated in the name of the hospital.

Closed and Transferred Hospitals

Where a hospital has been closed or transferred to another group, since 31st December, 1951, this is indicated in this Directory, but for the bed statistics of transferred hospitals reference must be made in Section 8 to the teaching hospital group to which the hospital belonged on 31st December, 1951.

“Our laundering is really well-done now!”

All those special soilings that are encountered in the hospital laundry are well taken care of by LENSEX
— the all-purpose detergent made by Shell. LENSEX-washed blankets remain fleecier.

Bed-linen comes up not only whiter, but really clean.
Getting through the staff wash is a much quicker job. In addition to improving the quality of the wash, LENSEX saves much actual time in the wash-house and makes really worthwhile savings in fuel and water and material costs.

SECTION 7

BLOOD TRANSFUSION SERVICES

I.—ENGLAND AND WALES

Responsibility for the administration of the Blood Transfusion Service is vested in regional hospital boards as part of the hospital and specialist services provided under Section 3 of the National Health Service Act, 1946.

Functions for which regional hospital boards are responsible are as follows :—

- (1) provision of accommodation, equipment (other than that supplied centrally) and staff for the regional transfusion centres, a list of which is given below ;
- (2) organisation and maintenance of donor panels ; enrolment and call-up of donors, and co-ordination for this purpose of voluntary donor organisations ;
- (3) bleeding of donors, including the appropriate tests, and simple medical examination of all donors ;
- (4) issue of certificates, badges and blood group records ;
- (5) investigation of complaints and settlement of claims for compensation ;
- (6) maintenance of blood banks, other than those maintained by individual hospitals for their own purposes, and distribution to teaching and non-teaching hospitals, including service hospitals, of whole blood, blood products obtained from central sources and transfusion apparatus ;
- (7) assembly, maintenance and distribution of sterile transfusion equipment.
- (8) production of blood plasma and serum for central purposes ;
- (9) giving of transfusions to patients by arrangement with hospital management committees and boards of governors.

Certain functions of the service are performed centrally, these being :—

(i) preparation of dried plasma and other human blood products by the Blood Products Research Unit at the Lister Institute at Chelsea and Elstree for distribution in accordance with the demands of regional hospital boards and, to a limited extent, overseas (the Forces, N. Ireland, part of the Commonwealth, etc.) ;*

(ii) preparation and distribution of grouping sera (prepared, to international standards, by the Blood Group Reference Laboratory at the Lister Institute, Chelsea) to regional transfusion centres and overseas ;*

(iii) supply of standard materials and equipment ;

(iv) certain aspects of national publicity ;

(v) national statistics, which are made available to regional hospital boards.

N.B.—A complementary “ fresh blood ” service is provided by the Greater London Red Cross Blood Transfusion Service, for details of which see Part II of the Director of Organisations.

NOTES ON BED AND PATIENT STATISTICS

ENGLAND AND WALES

The page number after the name of each group affords a cross reference to the same group in the earlier directory sections (Sections 4 and 5).

The figures given refer to the year ended 31st December, 1951, the total bed complement figures applying to that date. The information corresponds closely to that requested by the Ministry of Health on Form No. S.H.3, a copy of which was circulated to hospital authorities under cover of R.H.B.(51) 126, H.M.C.(51) 117, B.G.(51) 120. Some of the salient points from the notes which accompanied this form are given below.

Total bed complement (1) is the number of beds permanently retained at a hospital for the treatment of in-patients including private pay beds. It excludes, however, the following types of bed: (i) labour as distinct from maternity beds; (ii) beds in reception wards; (iii) temporary beds (whether actual beds or stretchers); (iv) observation or recovery beds in the out-patient departments used for only a few hours; (v) cots for newly-born infants in maternity departments; (vi) non-sick beds in joint-user hospitals.

Average daily number of occupied beds (3) is calculated with reference to persons occupying beds in in-patient departments of the hospital at a fixed hour of the day. Patients in temporary beds in the in-patient departments are included, but infants born in maternity wards are excluded. Also excluded are sick staff receiving hospital treatment in their living quarters.

Part-payment beds and part-paying patients are included with the ordinary beds and patients elsewhere in addition to information being given separately about them against items 12 and 13.

Pathological, radiological physiotherapy and other special departments (14, 15, 16 and 17). These figures are excluded from those for total out-patient attendances (19).

New out-patients (18) refers to the only, or first attendance of a continuous series at a clinical department for a particular ailment. A person attending different departments (excluding the special departments 14, 15, 16 and 17) is counted as a separate new out-patient in each department.

Attendances in Casualty Department (20) refers to patients who come to the hospital unannounced and are seen and treated otherwise than at a consultative session.

Beds allocated. Figures of beds allocated are shown against a specialist department only where it is supervised by a specialist who holds his appointment at the hospital expressly in that capacity, the only exception being chronic sick and infectious diseases hospitals.

Unclassified (23). Where a bed is not allocated for the use of a particular special department, and is not classed as "General Medicine" or "General Surgery", it is entered against "Unclassified".

Staff Wards (24) refers to beds set aside for sick staff in the hospital not in their living quarters.

Chronic Sick (45) refers to beds in wards set aside for chronic sick and includes cases of uncertified senile dementia and beds in long stay annexes for mentally enfeebled old people.

Pre-Convalescent Annexes (48) refers to beds in annexes to a main hospital to which patients are transferred before completion of hospital treatment, the annexes being too far removed from the hospital to be regarded simply as part of the hospital.

Convalescent (49) refers to beds for convalescent patients in convalescent homes.

General Practice Hospitals (50) refers to beds in hospitals where general practitioners, not acting as specialists, have charge of their own patients. It excludes "general practice dentistry".

Private Pay-Beds (52) are shown as a separate entity, not being included with ordinary beds and part-payment beds in the general bed allocation.

N.B.—It should be noted that the occupancy rate figures may in some cases, due to a reduction in the bed complement during the period covered, exceed the figure given for the total bed complement and that the aggregate of the "beds allocated" figures may differ from the total bed complement due to some unavailable beds not being allocated.

Transferred Hospitals

Where a hospital has been transferred to another group since 31st December, 1951 it is shown in this section under the group to which it belonged on 31st December, 1951, but in the earlier directory sections (Sections 4 and 5) it appears under the group to which it has since been transferred.

SCOTLAND

The page number after the name of each group affords a cross reference to the same group in the earlier Directory Section (Section 6). The figures refer to the year ended 31st March, 1952, the total bed complement figures applying to that date. It should be noted that the occupancy rate figures may in some cases, due to a reduction of bed complement during the period covered exceed the figure given for the total bed complement.

Clinics although listed in the directory section (Section 6) are not included in this section, no statistics in respect of them being available.

Chronic Sick patients are included under the type of bed which they occupy; V.D. beds shown under Other Infectious Diseases.

JOINT USER INSTITUTIONS

Bed Complement

Bed complement figures are given under the following heads :—

Acute		Men.	=	Mental (other than Mental Deficiency).
Mat.	=	M.D.	=	Mental Deficiency.
Chr.	=	Other
I.D.	=	Pri.	=	Private Patient.
T.B.	=	P.P.	=	Part-Payment.

The category "Acute" covers all general and special acute beds other than those for private patients or for maternity, I.D., T.B., or mental treatment. The category "Mental (other than Mental Deficiency)" covers all mental treatment beds (other than for mental defectives) including psychiatric beds in general hospitals. The category "Other" covers beds which do not fall under any of the other categories. Wherever known the nature of the beds included under "Other" is indicated in the "Notes" column. All private patient beds whether or not reserved for any special types of case, are included under the one heading "Private Patient" i.e. no private patient beds are included under any of the other categories. Part-Payment beds are, on the other hand, included in the first instance under other categories, i.e. Acute, Maternity, etc., and in the total number of beds given in the last but one column of figures. The figures given in ordinary type are the number of beds which are actually available for use. Where, in addition to these beds, the hospital has further beds which, because of shortage of staff or other causes (other than purely temporary causes such as re-decoration), are not available for use, the figures given in italics represent the number of these additional beds.

For key to letter symbols see Notes on Directory, page 41 for England and Wales and page 317 for Scotland.

BRONCO offers the greatest value in toilet tissue to-day. It has a unique texture, soft and satiny and is unequalled for quality.

TWO RECOMMENDED TOILET TISSUES

Made by the firm with over 63 years' reputation for quality tissues

"Sanico"

SANICO is something really different in toilet tissue, wonderfully soft and particularly absorbent.

CONTRIBUTORY AND PROVIDENT SCHEMES

I.—CONTRIBUTORY SCHEMES

The following list details the contributory schemes which are providing benefits and services ancillary and additional to those provided under the National Health Service and National Insurance Acts.

In some cases they represent amalgamations between two or more schemes existing prior to the 5th July, 1948. Where there has been a change in title, the new name is given. The aims and objects of the schemes have been widened on account of the passing of the above-mentioned Acts. Many of the schemes provide a hospital cash benefit and particulars of these and of the other benefits available can be obtained from the secretary of each scheme. Unless otherwise indicated by an asterisk, the schemes are affiliated to the British Hospitals Contributory Schemes Association (1948), Royal London House, Queen Charlotte Street, Bristol, 1. The Honorary Secretary of the Association will be pleased to supply any further information.

Ousting Superstition

MANY were the superstitious rites of early medicine. None, perhaps, was stranger than the ritual used in gathering black hellebore, the Christmas Rose. To potentiate its virtues as a cure for madness, those who sought it went barefooted, robed in white. Bread and wine were sacrificed. The right hand plucked the blossom and secretly conveyed it to the left.

Today, medicinal plants are cultivated by strictly scientific methods. The Wellcome Materia Medica Farms, for instance, are recognised as models of progressive husbandry—as thoroughly attuned to modern medical needs as, in their wider spheres, are the Wellcome Chemical Works and The Wellcome Research Laboratories. All these units of The Wellcome Foundation—pioneers in the development and production of synthetic drugs no less than of vegetable—work together for the furtherance of modern medical science. The many therapeutic agents they produce are distributed by . . .

WHITLEY COUNCILS FOR THE HEALTH SERVICES (Great Britain)

DETAILS are given below of the organisation of the Whitley Councils for the Health Services (Great Britain), which have been set up for the negotiation of remuneration and conditions of service for persons engaged in the National Health Service in Great Britain.

The National Machine

The National Whitley Machine consists of a General Council and nine functional councils. The General Council deals with those conditions of service and other matters which affect employees in more than one functional group, e.g. such things as a minimum code of conduct, the preparation of arbitration machinery, arrangements for travelling expenses and sick leave, while each functional council deals with remuneration and all other conditions of service requiring national decision, but affecting only the staff comprised within its group. From this it will be appreciated that the functional councils are not subsidiary to the General Council, but on a level with it, and that they are autonomous bodies, their decisions not being subject to approval by the General Council.

Each council consists of a management side and a staff side, the latter in the case of the General Council comprising representatives from the functional councils, and in the case of the functional councils themselves comprising the various participating staff organisations. It should be noted that the composition of the individual staff sides is entirely a matter for the organisations themselves to determine. The constitution of the General Council, which embodies most of the major features found in those of the functional councils, is published overleaf. The national machinery covers England, Scotland and Wales. To secure the proper representation of Scottish interests, provision has been made for a Scottish Advisory Committee.

Regional Machinery

Provision has also been made for Whitley machinery on a regional basis, the functions of such machinery being to deal with local questions arising from the application of national agreements, and any local disputes arising between management and staff of regional hospital boards, boards of governors of teaching hospitals, executive councils, etc.

A further question with which the Whitley Councils are concerned is that of joint staff consultative committees at hospital level.

Whitley Council Decisions

Decisions of the Whitley Councils are arrived at by agreement between the two sides, sometimes reached after negotiations in the council concerned, and sometimes in joint committees of that council. Where agreement cannot be reached, the dispute may be referred to arbitration, where a final decision is given.

Decisions reached in Whitley Councils are communicated to employing authorities by the Ministry of Health.

Participation in the work of the Whitley Machine

The Minister of Health has made it clear in a parliamentary reply (Hansard, 29th January, 1948) that persons employed in the National Health Service would not be required as a condition of service to belong to any organisation, professional or trade union, but at the same time he expressed the hope that, while there would be no compulsion, such employees would be encouraged to belong to their appropriate organisations. This being so, it was clear that arrangements had to be made for special paid leave for members of health service staffs to attend Whitley Council meetings, including separate staff side meetings and committee meetings directly connected with the Whitley Councils. Arrangements for this were approved at the first meeting of the General Council in December, 1948.

Progress to Date

By the end of 1949 seven functional Councils had been set up and were in full operation and the General Council had also been fully constituted and in operation. During 1950 the Medical Council was constituted, but at the time of going to press a comprehensive Dental Staffs Council participating in the work of the General Council had not been established although there had been set up a Dental Whitley Council (Local Authorities).

There follows more detailed information concerning the scope, constitution and officers of the General Council and each of the eight functional councils in the Whitley machine.

MAIN CONSTITUTION

OF THE WHITLEY COUNCILS FOR THE HEALTH SERVICES (GREAT BRITAIN)

(adopted at a meeting of the General Council held on 31st March, 1949)

1. Area

The sphere of operation of the Councils shall be England, Wales and Scotland.

2. Functions of the Councils

The functions of the Councils shall be—

- (i) To secure the greatest possible measure of co-operation between the Authorities responsible for the Nation's health and the general body of persons engaged in the health services, with a view to increased efficiency in the public service, and the well-being of those engaged in the services.
- (ii) To provide machinery for the consideration of remuneration and conditions of service of persons within the ambit of Section 66 of the National Health Service Act, 1946, and Section 65 of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act, 1947, excluding :—
 - (a) Persons in the administrative and clerical class employed by Local Health Authorities and in Scotland by Education Authorities.
 - (b) Domestic staffs employed by Local Health Authorities other than in residential institutions.
 - (c) Persons employed by voluntary organisations with whom Local Health Authorities make agency arrangements.
- (iii) To provide machinery for the consideration of the remuneration of persons with whom an Executive Council may make arrangements for the provision of general medical services, including maternity medical services, general dental services, pharmaceutical services or supplementary ophthalmic services, under Sections 33, 38, 40 or 41 of the National Health Service Act, 1946, or Sections 34, 39, 40 or 42 of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act, 1947.
- (iv) To provide machinery also for the consideration of the remuneration and conditions of service of persons in the service of Local Authorities engaged in employment analogous to those covered by (ii) above.
- (v) To provide machinery also for the consideration of the remuneration and conditions of employment of any persons whom the General Council may from time to time decide to admit within its scope.

3. Machinery

The Councils shall comprise—

- (i) A General Council.
- (ii) Nine functional Councils, dealing with particular groups of persons engaged in the health services, namely—
 - (a) Administrative and Clerical.
 - (b) Ancillary Grades.
 - (c) Dental.
 - (d) Medical.
 - (e) Nurses and Midwives.
 - (f) Optical.
 - (g) Pharmaceutical.
 - (h) Professional and Technical Staffs, Group A.
 - (i) Professional and Technical Staffs, Group B.
- (iii) A Scottish Advisory Committee.

4. Scope

- (i) Subject to (ii) and (iii) below, each of the functional councils specified in Clause 3 (ii) above shall determine remuneration and all conditions of service requiring national decision affecting directly only those persons comprised within its group.
- (ii) Where conditions of service other than remuneration affect two or three functional councils those conditions of service may be determined by the functional councils concerned acting together.
- (iii) Where conditions of service other than remuneration are of general application they shall be determined by the General Council.

5. Membership

A. General Council

(i) The Council shall consist of . . . members, of whom 26 shall be appointed to represent the authorities responsible for the administration of the Health Services (hereinafter termed the Management) and . . . shall represent the employees of those Authorities, and persons in contractual arrangement with Executive Councils (hereinafter referred to, as the Staff).

(ii) The 26 representatives of the Management shall be appointed as follows :—

Ministry of Health (including Welsh Board of Health)	6
Department of Health for Scotland	2
Regional Hospital Boards—
England and Wales	3
Scotland	1
Boards of Governors of Teaching Hospitals in England and Wales	2
Executive Councils	2
County Councils Associations	3
London County Council	2
Association of Municipal Corporations	3
Scottish Local Authority Associations	2

The 29 representatives* of the Staff shall be appointed by the Staff Sides of the nine Councils as follows :—

Ancillary Grades	5
Dental.
Medical.								4
Nurses and Midwives	4
Optical	3
Pharmaceutical	3
Professional and Technical Staffs—A	3
Professional and Technical Staffs—B	3

* Provisional figures only.

B. Functional Councils and Scottish Advisory Committee.

The membership of the functional Councils and of the Scottish Advisory Committee shall be as provided by their Constitutions.

C. Scottish Representation.

In determining membership of the General and Functional Councils, the Management and the Staff shall secure appropriate representation of Scottish interests.

6. Retirement of Members

Members shall retire from the Councils on ceasing to be members of or to hold office under the authority, organisation, Department or body by which they were appointed.

The members of the Councils shall retire on the 31st July of each year and shall be eligible for re-appointment, provided that any Staff Side member due so to retire shall remain in office, if otherwise eligible, until the appointment of a successor shall have been notified to the Staff Side Secretary. The original members of the Councils shall remain in office until the 31st July, 1950. Casual vacancies shall be filled by the original appointing body, which shall appoint a member to sit until the end of the current period.

7. Committees

Each Council may appoint such standing, special or sectional committees or sub-committees as may be considered necessary, and may delegate to such committees or sub-committees such powers as may be agreed. The Management and the Staff Side of committees and sub-committees of functional Councils and of the General Council may include representatives of organisations not represented on the Council.

8. Co-opted Members

Each Council may co-opt for any of its meetings representatives of organisations having a special interest in a particular matter, or persons not being members of the Council as may serve the purposes of the Council.

Each Council may appoint on any of its Committees, or allow any Committee to co-opt for any of its meetings, representatives of organisations having a special interest in a particular matter, or persons not being members of the Council, as may serve the special purposes of the Council;

Provided that members thus co-opted shall serve only in a consultative capacity.

9. Chairman

Each Council shall appoint annually a chairman and vice-chairman. The chairman shall be appointed alternately from the Management and Staff Sides. If the chairman is a representative of the Management, the vice-chairman shall be a representative of the Staff and vice versa.

10. Secretaries

Each Council shall appoint joint secretaries and such other officers as the Council may think fit. The persons so appointed may or may not be members of the Council.

11. Quorum

The quorum of a Council shall consist of not less than one-third of the members entitled to be present on each side. In the absence of a quorum, the chairman shall vacate the chair, and the business then under consideration shall be the first business to be discussed either at the next ordinary meeting or at a further special meeting to be held within 14 days after the date fixed for the first special meeting. The quorum of any committee of a Council shall, subject to any directions given by the Council, be determined by the Committee.

The proceedings of a Council or a Committee of a Council shall not be invalidated by any vacancy in their number or by any defect in the appointment of any member of the Council or the Committee.

12. Deputies

Where a member of a Council or a Committee is unable to attend any meeting, the organisation or body responsible for his appointment may send a deputy. A deputy shall have the right to speak and to vote as if he were a substantive.

13. References to the Scottish Advisory Committee

(i) If a Council decides that any matter before it falls to be considered in the light of special Scottish conditions, the matter shall be referred to the Scottish Advisory Committee.

(ii) If any two representatives on a Council claim that a matter before the Council should be considered by the Scottish Advisory Committee by reason of the existence of special Scottish conditions, the claim shall be referred to the Scottish Advisory Committee, and if the Scottish Advisory Committee is agreed that the matter is appropriate to be considered by that body it shall make its recommendations thereon to the appropriate Council.

(iii) If any claim in respect of special Scottish conditions is laid before the Scottish Advisory Committee without first having been laid before the appropriate Council, the Scottish Advisory Committee shall forthwith notify such Council of the substance of the claim, and shall then treat the claim as though it were submitted under the terms of paragraph (ii) of this Clause.

(iv) If any matter is referred to the Scottish Advisory Committee for consideration under paragraph (i), (ii), or (iii) of this Clause, and that Committee does not agree that the matter falls to be so considered, it shall advise the appropriate Council accordingly.

(v) The Scottish Advisory Committee may delegate to any standing or other sub-committee any or all of its advisory functions in relation to such field or interest as it may from time to time specify as the scope of the sub-committee.

(vi) All recommendations of the Scottish Advisory Committee or of any sub-committee acting on its behalf shall be reported to the appropriate Council which shall take such recommendation into account in making its decision, provided always that a Council shall be under no obligation to defer its decision pending receipt of the recommendation from the Scottish Advisory Committee if in its opinion either the matter is one of urgency, or the Scottish Advisory Committee has not submitted its recommendations within a reasonable time.

14. Meetings

Meetings of the Councils and of the Scottish Advisory Committee shall be held as often as required. The Chairman of a council or of the Scottish Advisory Committee shall call a special meeting upon a requisition from one-third of either side. The requisition and also the notice summoning the meeting shall state the nature of the business proposed to be transacted and the meeting shall take place within 21 days after the receipt of the requisition by the chairman and no business shall be transacted at any special meeting other than that specified in the notice summoning the meeting.

15. Decisions

Decisions of a Council or the Committee of a Council shall be reached by the concurrence of both sides. The decisions of any Committee of a Council shall require the approval of the Council of which it forms part unless power to decide has been formally delegated to that Committee by the Council.

The decisions of the General Council or of a functional Council shall be transmitted to the Minister of Health, the Secretary of State for Scotland, and the local authorities concerned.

16. Interpretation

Any question of the interpretation of a decision of a functional council or the General Council may be referred to that Council.

17. Arbitration

Every effort shall be made to accommodate differences of opinion between the two Sides of a Council in order to reach an agreed decision. Where it is impossible to accomplish this, it shall be open to the Management or the Staff organisations concerned to seek arbitration in accordance with the terms of an arbitration agreement to be determined by the General Council.

18. Finance

The cost of any activity undertaken by a Council shall be divided equally between the two Sides, unless otherwise determined by the Council.

19. Minutes

Minutes agreed by the Joint Secretaries shall be made for each Council or Committee meeting. The minutes of each General Council meeting shall be circulated to every member of each Council. The Minutes of each functional Council meeting shall be circulated to each member of that functional Council, to the joint secretaries of each other Council, and to every member of the General Council. The Minutes of each Committee meeting shall be circulated to each member of the committees, and the Council by which it was set up. The Minutes of the Scottish Advisory Committee shall be circulated to each member of the Committee and to the Joint Secretaries of each Council.

20. Application

(i) The provisions of this Constitution, other than Clause 5A, shall apply to each functional Council and, so far as appropriate, to the Scottish Advisory Committee, except as may be determined by such functional Council or the Committee with the consent of the General Council.

(ii) Each functional Council and the Scottish Advisory Committee may include in its own constitution such additional provisions as may seem necessary, provided that they do not conflict with the provisions of this constitution.

21. Amendment of Constitution

(i) The main constitution may be varied at any meeting of the General Council provided that notice of the terms of the proposed amendment has been circulated to each member of the General Council and each of the functional Councils at least 3 calendar months before the meeting.

(ii) Subject to the provisions of Clause 20 (i), the constitution of any functional Council may be varied at any meeting of the Council concerned, provided that notice of the terms of the proposed amendment has been circulated to each member of the Council at least 28 days before the meeting.

THE GENERAL AND FUNCTIONAL COUNCILS

THE GENERAL COUNCIL

The General Council deals with those conditions of service and other matters which are of general application to all staffs covered by the Whitley Councils for the Health Services (Great Britain), such as a minimum code of conduct. It also determines the lines of demarcation between the functional councils and has been responsible for drawing up and promulgating the Main Constitution of the Whitley Councils for the Health Services, which is printed above.

Nuffield Foundation	L. Farrer-Brown, J.P., 12-13, Mecklenburgh Sq., London, W.C.1. Terminus 5288.	The Foundation seeks to further the advancement of health and the prevention and relief of sickness in particular by medical research and teaching and by the organisation and development of medical and health services, the advancement of social well-being particularly by scientific research and the organisation, development and improvement of technical and commercial education, including the training of teachers and the provision of scholarships and prizes, the care and comfort of the aged poor. The foundation is a charitable trust, supporting projects within the above-mentioned terms of the Trust Deed, confining its activities to the help of organisations or (in the case of fellowships) individuals within the U.K. and Commonwealth. It is the practice of the Foundation to fund its grants—most of which are payable over a period of years—from current income, leaving future funds free for exploiting opportunities as they may occur.
Nuffield Provincial Hospitals Trust	L. Farrer-Brown, J.P., 12-13, Mecklenburgh Sq., London, W.C.1. Terminus 5288/9.	The objects of the Trust are threefold: namely to assist in—the betterment of regional co-ordination between those hospitals and ancillary medical services provided for in the National Health Service Act; the development and betterment of co-ordination on a regional basis (between themselves and in relation to hospitals) of those medical services ancillary to hospitals (e.g. industrial health services) to which the Act does not extend; and the improved organisation and efficient development of hospital and ancillary medical services throughout the Provinces. In pursuing these objects the policy of the Trust is directed to: (i) the fullest scientific study of the hospital and ancillary medical services; (ii) the conduct of practical experiments when they appear necessary as a means of finding the true facts or of testing promising ideas; (iii) the demonstration of new methods believed to be an improvement on the old, as being often the quickest way to gain their acceptance. Some of these studies and projects are conducted directly by the Trust—for example, its investigation into the functions and design of hospitals, a job-analysis of nursing, a study of group general practice, and an experiment in hospital costing (for the Ministry of Health); sometimes they are carried out by other bodies with financial support from the Trust—as in the case of experimental health-centre projects at Manchester and Harlow, and a study by the Department of Human Ecology, University of Cambridge, of arrangements for medical care in the East Anglian region to be followed by experiments for their improved co-ordination. The whole of the Trust's programme is intended

I—TECHNICAL AND GENERAL

ACOUSTIC TREATMENT

There are two units of noise measurement, the phon and the decibel, both of which are required to state the results of measurement, but both of which, for the purposes of the layman, can often be considered almost as equivalents over a wide range of frequencies. Five phons or five decibels is about the minimum change, either deterioration or improvement which is significant in practice.

EQUIVALENT LOUDNESS OF OUTDOOR NOISE*

Type of Noise or Locality	Equivalent Loudness (phons)

AVERAGE LOUDNESS OF SOME COMMON AIR-BORNE NOISES*

Noise	Equivalent Loudness (phons)
Loud wireless	80-90
Average wireless	65-80
Soft wireless	50-65
Conversation—normal ..	Up to 65
Conversation—quiet ..	Up to 45
Typing and tabulating—noisy office	Up to 80

*Post-War Building Study No. 14 Sound Insulation and Acoustics. Tables reprinted by permission of H.M. Stationery Office.

The scales of ordinary noises, given in phons, are set out in the left hand column and a scale of suggested standards of quiet, below.

SUGGESTED STANDARDS OF QUIET*

Occupancy	Loudness (phons)
Study or sleeping	15
Reading or writing	20
Boardroom	30
Sedentary office work ..	35
Quiet conversation
Average office, telephone work and restaurant ..	40
Noisy office	60

Noises fall into two categories, airborne noise, conversation and the wireless, and contact noise, footsteps, the movement of furniture and the noise of equipment fixed to the structure of the building. Modern building construction, with its ferro-concrete structure, innumerable pipes and ducts and smooth reflective materials tends to become a sound box if adequate preventive measures are not taken.

Sound Insulation in Hospitals—The Problem

The hospital, of all buildings, should be protected from noise. Two difficulties in the way of the effective sound insulation of hospitals are, however, that the construction, equipment and furnishings tend to produce hard, smooth, reflecting surfaces, which do not make for quietness, and that the installation of an elaborate system of sound proofing would raise building costs beyond present-day limits.

Sound Insulation in Existing Buildings

Hospitals in towns offer two problems, the reduction of internal and external noise. The table above giving standards of quiet suggests that in hospitals intruding noises should be reduced to 15-20 phons. The planting of trees and tall hedges as noise screens should not be overlooked as they absorb an appreciable amount of traffic noise.

Outdoor Noise and Treatment of Windows

Regarding insulation against outside noises it is generally found that the windows of a building are less insulating than the walls. The method of ventilation is the limiting factor, for if no provision is made for cross ventilation,

Type of Window*	Average Sound Reduction decibels*
21 oz. glass	28
Double 21 oz. glass— ½" spacing	38
1" "	42
2" "	46
5" "	49
8" "	53
(Best effects in low or medium frequencies, good for traffic)
¼" plate glass	35
Double ¼" plate glass 5½" apart	58
Double ¼" plate glass 5½" apart, interspace lined with absorbent	63 approx.

then it will often be necessary for the windows to be left wide open with little or no insulating effect. If cross ventilation is the system used, the windows can be opened on the side furthest away from noise being made at any given time. Also, the difference in pressure on the two sides of a building encourages circulation even if the windows are not fully open. Artificial ventilation and air conditioning naturally allow full advantage to be taken of insulating measures.

Airborne Noises

Double windows should be installed wherever possible as a safeguard against noise, particularly in wards and offices. A good method of absorbing street noise is to place an absorbent on the ceiling above the window where the sound will strike it directly. Noise baffles can be used if there is cross ventilation and the flow of fresh air not impeded. Double windows can be successfully treated by lining the edges of the space between the windows with an absorbent of 1 inch thickness with the inlet for air placed at the top of the outer glass and the outlet into the room at the bottom. If fitted with louvres to deflect the sound this type of window will give good ventilation and about the same sound insulation as a closed window of single glazing.

Noises Caused by Hospital Equipment

In a steel-framed building, where steel is used both vertically and horizontally, as a first precaution against noise some method should be adopted where possible to insulate connections in the steel structure, mascalite packs having been used with good effect.

Apart from taking measures against the conducting capacity of the structure itself, means have to be found to deal with sources of noise emanating from within the building. Lifts, which should in any case be sited as far away as possible from the wards, should be soundproofed by being surrounded by hollow walls, with insulating material between the walls. Food trolleys should have rubber or fibre wheels, and kitchen fittings should be insulated wherever possible—ovens, for example, being provided with self-closing doors which cannot be slammed. Similarly, doors should have overhead door checks, but apart from this felt or rubber can be set as a continuous beading in the rebate against which the door comes to rest.

Walls and Ceilings.—Absorbent materials on the walls and ceilings will also reduce airborne noise. There are several varieties of these acoustic tiles and plasters available but the detailed choice must be left to an expert consultant. Generally treatment of the ceiling only is adequate for most parts of the hospital.

Floors.—Great attention should be paid to the flooring materials in corridors and other portions of the hospital taking a heavy traffic. If corridors do not have a good resilient flooring they tend to act as sound boxes aggravating the trouble by sustaining the sound of footsteps and reflecting the sound from wall, floor and ceiling. Consequently the usual hard floorings, terrazzo and tile, are bad from the point of view of impact noise reduction.

A scale of sound reduction giving a variety of resilient materials laid on bare concrete is given below :

Material	Reduction in phons
⅛" lino	5
⅛" lino on roofing felt ..	5
Wood blocks	5–10
Thin rubber carpet	5–10
⅛" carpet on ⅛" underfelt ..	10
¼" hard rubber cork composition	10
⅛" sheet rubber on ¼" sponge rubber	20

Noises Caused by Occupants

In addition to the attention paid to flooring, other factors in this connection are the necessity for quiet speaking and quiet bells, telephones and signal systems. Attention should also be paid to the noise of typewriters, and other office equipment.

APPOINTMENT SYSTEM FOR OUT-PATIENTS

There are many advantages accruing from an efficient appointment system for out-patients. It saves the hospital a great deal of extra work and space and avoids overcrowded clinics by spreading the work evenly over the day. Records staff can look out the patients' folders, and any extra reports on X-rays obtained which may be needed before the clinic opens. An appointments system will show up which clinics are overcrowded and also will facilitate a steady flow of work to ancillary departments. Added to the above advantages from the hospitals' point of view is the primary consideration of the convenience of an appointment system to the patient and his employer in saving time and trouble.

ARTIFICIAL LIGHTING

(The following notes have been kindly compiled by the Lighting Service Bureau, 2, Savoy Hill, London, W.C.2.)

Specialised lighting in hospitals is largely confined to wards, operating theatres and clinics. Lighting of the other parts of the building generally follows standard modern practice, although, of course, local conditions often necessitate special treatment.

Wards

General lighting is needed to illuminate the central part of the ward, but must be supplemented by bed headlights. Fluorescent lamps in louvred fittings have been found suitable for the former purpose, filament lamps are almost always used for the latter. In both cases the lamps themselves should be screened from the patients' view, and no part of the fitting should have a higher brightness than 1 candle/square inch—lower brightness levels are recommended. Normal commercial types of diffusing fittings designed for other purposes either for filament or fluorescent lamps, are generally of too high a brightness; indirect lighting fittings are generally considered impractical owing to their low efficiency and high maintenance costs. Whether filament or fluorescent lamps are employed, a louvred, op-topen fitting with opaque sides is recommended for general lighting; emergency and night-lighting systems can often be built into the fitting. Bed-head lights should have opaque shades with open bottoms, to confine the light to the bed itself. Each fitting should be individually switched, the switch being within easy reach of the patient. For this reason the mounting of fittings on panels incorporating switch, wireless outlet and an emergency socket outlet is not recommended.

In some hospitals, night-lighting of wards has been done by means of lamps mounted below bed-level.

It is difficult to light a nurses' table in a ward adequately without giving rise to glare and too high brightness contrasts. The provision of a separate room or cubicle is strongly recommended.

Operating Theatres

The operating table may be lighted by tungsten filament or fluorescent lamps. If filament lamps are used they are best mounted in a "shadowless" operating theatre fitting which is designed to give a hollow cone of light on a concentrated area. This type of fitting normally uses a 150 W. lamp, which may be run off the low voltage D.C. supply. Low voltage lamps are more efficient than those operating on the mains voltage, so in addition to obviating any interruption of the light owing to mains failure, this method gives more light for the same current consumption. Usually three 60 W. lamps are also provided to come into circuit automatically if the main lamp fails.

Alternatively up to six fluorescent lamps can be mounted in a metal hood, each lamp having its own parabolic reflector, and the light being concentrated along the centre of the table. The colour of the light is like daylight, where colour-matching lamps are employed, but other types of fluorescent lamps distort colours in a way to which the observer must accustom himself, just as he must to the somewhat different colour distortion caused by ordinary filament lamps. Anaesthetists generally dislike fluorescent lamps at first for this reason, but soon get accustomed to them with use. The penetration of the light is less than that of the filament lamp in a "shadowless" fitting, making it less suitable for deep cavity work. Emergency lighting can either be by means of filament lamps on a D.C. supply (causing a colour change when they come into operation) or from an A.C. supply operated by a standby plant, which will take a few seconds to come into action in the event of mains failure.

Advantages of the shadowless tungsten fitting are:—

- (1) Good penetration for deep-cavity work.
- (2) Can use low voltage D.C. lamps.
- (3) No colour-change under emergency lighting.
- (4) Concentration of light on wound minimises danger of too high surround brightness.

Disadvantages are:—

- (1) With concentration of light comes a concentration of radiant heat.

(2) The lighted area is restricted to the wound—a disadvantage in some operations such as skin-grafting.

(3) Local lighting may still be needed for very deep cavities.

Advantages of fluorescent lighting are:—

- (1) Very good diffusion of light for surface work.
- (2) Very little radiant heat from the lamps.
- (3) The colour of the light from some classes of lamp is more like daylight.
- (4) Longer lamp life and several lamps in the fitting minimise risk of total lamp failure.

Disadvantages are:—

- (1) Local lighting is always necessary for deep cavity work.
- (2) Change of colour when filament lamps are used for emergency lighting.
- (3) Risk of too high surround brightness, owing to the whole area of the operating table being lighted. This can be much reduced by the use of coloured dressings.

General Lighting of Theatres

The general lighting of operating theatres has tended to be much neglected, but should be of the order of 20-30 lm./ft.² in order to allow nurses to carry out ancillary duties. The brightness of the X-ray viewing screen should be capable of variation according to the amount of light in the room.

Clinics

Special lighting here will vary with the requirements. Dental and ophthalmic clinics will need special treatment; in skin clinics the use of colour-matching fluorescent lamps is recommended.

General Data

Below is arranged a number of tables and definitions which may prove of use to hospital managements. Information on up-to-date practice is available from a number of sources, including the E.L.M.A. Lighting Service Bureau, 2, Savoy Hill, W.C.2, and the Illuminating Engineering Society, 32, Victoria Street, S.W.1.

Definitions

Lumen—the unit of light flux. The total amount of light falling on or intercepted by a surface of unit area every part of which is at unit distance from a uniform point source of one candle. The total flux emitted from a uniform light source of one candle power is 12.56 lumens.

Candle or Candela—the unit of luminous intensity in a given direction from a point source.

Foot-candle—the unit of illumination. The degree to which a surface is illuminated is measured in lumens/sq. ft. or foot candles. One lumen will light a surface of one square foot to an average illumination of one lumen/ft.² or foot candle.

Brightness—the candle power per unit projected area of the surface in the direct on of vision (the apparent area as seen from that direction). The most convenient units to employ depend on whether the surface is self-luminous or not. The candle per square inch and stilb are commonly used for most modern light sources and the foot lambert for ordinary illuminated surfaces.

- 1 stilb=1 candle per sq. cm. reflected or emitted.
- 1 foot lambert=1 lumen per sq. ft. reflected or emitted.

Economics

The high efficiency of fluorescent lamps compared to that of tungsten-filament lamps has led a number of people to use them for general lighting. The choice of light source ought to be made on its suitability for its purpose, but where either type of lamp is equally suitable the cheaper will obviously be installed. In the case of the fluorescent lamp a higher installation cost may often be offset by a lower cost of operation and maintenance: the cost will depend on the hours of use of the installation, the cost of current and to some extent on the cost of the fittings used. Those interested are advised to study the E.L.M.A. Lighting Service Bureau's Technical Supplement No. 5, "Lighting Economics", which gives figures and calculations for arriving at a just estimate of the most economic lighting system.

BED BUREAUX

Bed bureaux now operate in many parts of the country, sometimes on a group and sometimes on a regional basis. In the London area the Emergency Bed Service is operated by King Edward's Hospital Fund, acting as agent for the four metropolitan regional hospital boards.

The main objects of a bed bureaux are: (i) to make the best use of the available beds in the group or area, evening out disproportionate waiting figures between the different hospitals; (ii) to save the time of general practitioners by eliminating the need for excessive telephoning; and (iii) to provide a reliable source of statistics which in their turn can be used towards the improvement of services.

It is possible to develop regional bed bureaux for emergency cases whilst at the same time encouraging groups to have their own bureaux to control admissions within their own areas, but care should be taken to dovetail the two where this happens, sources of potential confusion being plentiful.

BEDS

The four main considerations to be taken into account when selecting beds for the hospital are comfort, strength, hygiene and cost.

The Hospital Bed

The type of bed most widely adopted in general wards is the backrest bedstead of three feet in width. In the interests of hygiene the frame should be of welded tubular construction, the headend and footend bows being of $1\frac{1}{2}$ inch tube. The bed should be easily adjustable and movable and dust proof. The minimum amount of tubing, always allowing for uprights in the footend to prevent the mattress from slipping through is an asset. Backrests where provided should be incorporated in the head bow and fitted with a locking device to prevent slipping when in use. If pole fittings are incorporated they should be fitted with a stop to prevent rotation through more than half a circle in order to obviate swinging against the wall.

Each leg of the headend should be fitted on a complete ball race swivel with castors of not less than 4 in. diameter. Vulcanised rubber tyres are suitable for ordinary types of flooring. With rubber floors, however, hard composition or hardwood wheels should be substituted. The footend should be fitted with a wheeling device which does not require undue exertion on the part of the operator to bring the wheels into action.

The finish should be carried out in best quality stoving enamel. In recent years there has been a trend away from black, and aluminium finish is now more widely used.

British Standard 1682 : 1950 covers a hospital bedstead suitable for general purposes, of tubular steel construction and 6 ft. 6 in. long by 3 ft. wide, with spring mattress at 2 ft. from the floor. Provision is also made for bedsteads which are 6 ft. 9 in. or 7 ft. long together with alternative heights of 2 ft. 3 in. and 2 ft. 6 in. where these variations are required by the purchasers. The standard includes a specification for a removable lifting pole and provides for the inclusion of adjustable back rests and wheeling devices. In the latter case general requirements are given, but sufficient latitude is left for individual manufacturers to devise their own patterns so as not to impede progress and development.

Spring Mattresses

To fit the head and footends of the above type of bedstead a spring mattress and frame 6 ft. 6 in. \times 3 ft. will be required. There should be not fewer than 16 springs at each end in the 3 ft. wide frame. All links and hooks in the mesh should be sufficiently closed to prevent their becoming detached on removal of tension and should not provide any projections which might damage an overlay.

Section 2 of B.S. 1682 gives specifications for spring mattresses.

Overlay Mattresses

Until recently a good pattern hair mattress has been standard but the internal spring mattress, or similar rubber centred types where each part yields directly to the pressure applied to it, are becoming more widely used in hospitals. Internal springs should be rust-proofed so that they stand up to sterilisation processes.

Special Bedsteads

There are many types of special bedstead on the market for treating special cases. A point to be borne in mind with "Fowler Position" bedsteads is to ensure that this type of bedstead, which was originally intended for recovery after abdominal operations, really does give a true "Fowler Position." This type of bed has a wide application for general nursing as the patient can be brought into a sitting position with the minimum of effort and strain and nursing is thereby facilitated.

With regard to fracture bedsteads the main problem is mechanical. A device is therefore needed for applying more than one force to each of one or more limbs of the patient with a full range of adjustment both for direction and magnitude. Such forces need to be balanced because the patient's body, owing to small movements, will tend to travel in the direction of any force however small. For treatments of the lower limbs some method of raising the foot of the bed would therefore appear essential. Several types of fracture beds are available. All bedsteads for fracture treatment have other uses and in general are adapted for any cases needing extension, abduction, suspension or immobilisation of the limbs or trunk.

Children's Cots

British Standard 1694 : 1950 covers children's cots suitable for use in hospitals. The standard height of the cots to the top of the corner castings is 2 ft., but alternative heights of 2 ft. 3 in. and 2 ft. 6 in. have also been provided for use where higher cots are required. Similarly, a standard length of 4 ft. 6 in. has been adopted, but an alternative length of 5 ft. has been standardised for use in special cases. The dimensions of the gaps between the tubes and bars forming the ends and the sides are to be not less than 3 in. or more than $3\frac{1}{2}$ in. The standard also deals with constructional details of the head and foot ends, the drop sides, the spring mattress, the castors and the finish.

BEDSIDE LOCKERS

Basic requirements for the design of hospital bedside lockers have been laid down by the British Standards Institution. Although one type of locker cannot be expected to meet the needs of all hospital patients, it has been considered practicable to classify lockers into three main categories, general purposes lockers, lockers for infectious diseases hospitals and lockers for children's hospitals. In view of the wide variety of needs to be met it was decided not to lay down a restrictive specification for one pattern of locker in any of these classes, but to indicate the kind of articles for which the locker should provide separate accommodation and the minimum space to be allotted to each kind of article, and to specify the basic requirements in materials, dimensions, manufacture and finishes.

In lockers for general use provision should be made for the storage of toilet requisites, the larger kinds of personal effects, such as knitting bags, books, newspapers, etc., small personal items such as smoking requisites, cosmetics and watches, towels, soiled linen (for example by a canvas bag with a large flap which allows the bag to be closed completely) limited items of food and small articles of clothing, for example, dressing gown, fresh nightclothes, clean handkerchiefs and slippers. The compartment to hold clothing should be in the lower part of the locker. In the upper part of the locker there should be four compartments for food, toilet articles, books and personal effects, that is if the locker is used with a plain over-bed table. If there is an over-bed table fitted with compartments, the locker does not require to have so many compartments. Where lockers are used without an over-bed table they should incorporate a sliding or folding table in their construction. The compartments containing food, toilet requisites and clothing should be ventilated. Compartments with doors should be provided in preference to drawers, and a deep drawer should not be fitted in the lower part of the locker. Lockers should generally be mounted upon castors, although there may be special cases where some other supports such as skids are necessary. Lockers should be designed so as to be easily cleaned and disinfected and to prevent as far as possible the accumulation of dust. For example, if a sliding table is provided, it should be closely fitted to prevent the entry of dust. Some degree of reversibility is recommended so that a locker may be used with equal convenience at either side of the bed.

Among features of some existing lockers which the Standard omits as undesirable is the provision of a seat as an integral part of a locker, because it forms a receptacle which is difficult to clean, is uncomfortable for visitors and inconvenient from the point of view of conversation with the patient. Another undesirable feature is a surround which is used to prevent objects from falling off the locker, for it is considered that its advantages are outweighed by the increased difficulty of cleaning and the inconvenience caused by the surround if the top of the locker is used for resting trays or writing notes. A third feature which is strongly deprecated is the provision of a place for a urine bottle or a sputum mug in a piece of furniture which contains food.

Dimensions

The recommended dimensions for lockers are, for adults, height not less than 34 inches or more than 38½ inches, width 19 inches and depth 17 inches; for children, height 36 inches, width 14 inches and depth 14 inches. In order to allow some freedom in design, the actual arrangement of the compartments in the locker is not laid down, but specifications are given for the minimum dimensions of all compartments. The extended length of the sliding table should not be less than 14 inches or more than 18 inches.

CATERING

Buying

Except in the largest of hospitals all buying of commodities and equipment to be used in the catering section should preferably come under the direct aegis of the catering officer. Where buying is a full-time job every order must bear his approval for it is only in this way that he can keep in touch with market trends, etc. To ensure that the quality, variety and price of his requirements are satisfactory, it is imperative that he should interview personally all travellers, for by personal contact much more can be achieved than by the forwarding of formal orders and enquiries. The contract method, which is so prevalent among hospitals, is a system to be abhorred. Although it provides an easy method of obtaining requirements, after the initial preliminaries have been finalised, it prohibits taking advantage of seasonal changes, and it has been found that when contractors are supplying at a fixed price quality suffers and the "individual touch" is sadly lacking. The scope of buying is limited to a considerable extent under present conditions, but there still remains a wide field for the buyer to utilise his capabilities to the full.

Provisions

The bulk buying of provisions can effect considerable economies, but care must be taken that suitable storage is available, that too large a quantity is not ordered and that commodities are utilised in the order of delivery. By direct purchase from manufacturers of biscuits, jams, cereals, etc., the financial advantage gained is considerable, but it must be borne in mind that by having several suppliers of similar commodities the keenest prices are obtainable comparable with quality. Where it is inconvenient to deal directly with manufacturers or importers, recourse should be made to wholesalers of which it is advisable to have two, three or four for each particular type of foodstuff.

Bulk purchase of tea should be no haphazard operation, and prior to purchase a good blender's advice should be sought as to a blend suitable for use with the local water.

Some items do not lend themselves to bulk buying, among which may be listed cooking fats, margarine, butter and bacon, and these should be bought as required with no more than a day or two's supply in store. These last mentioned commodities which are not suitable for bulk buying should be stored in a cool dark room.

Coffee should only be purchased in small quantities and ground for use daily. It might be opportune to mention that the general standard of coffee-making throughout hospitals leaves much room for improvement.

It is an advantage to have separate stores for service and bulk storage and these should be situated on the north side of the building away from all heating apparatus and kept at an even temperature. On arrival all provisions, after checking and weighing, should be placed immediately into the bulk store, and when required for service, should be drawn therefrom, thus maintaining complete control and visual stocktaking.

Fish

The practice of buying fish direct from the coast presents many difficulties, among which is that of ensuring that the requisite type is received and delivery completed in accordance with schedule. It has been found more satisfactory to purchase from local sources on a day-to-day basis, thus taking advantage of the normal price fluctuations initiated by the law of supply and demand. It is false economy to concentrate on the cheap varieties, such as cod, for it will be found that if turbot, sole, lobster, red mullet, trout, etc., are provided, the initial cost, although higher, is recompensed by the resultant lower wastage factor and the raising of catering standard.

Meat

Only by daily contact with the butcher can meat supplies be kept at a high standard. On the catering officer's knowledge and experience depends the production of well-balanced menus, for in conjunction with an experienced larder cook a variety of meat dishes can be made available from the small ration at present allowed. Theoretical knowledge cannot take the place of practical experience in the buying of meat. Offal and poultry offer ways of supplementing the meat supply, but as poultry is used predominantly for special diets, the source of many popular dishes is lost. It will be found, however, that if care and intelligence are used when providing poultry, the price per portion of this welcome addition to the menu is not prohibitive. For stock purposes a constant supply of fresh beef bones is a matter of importance.

Crockery, Cutlery and Glassware

Purchases of the above should be made direct from manufacturers in all cases and the number of patterns should be kept to a minimum, thus entailing the holding of smaller stocks. Mainly due to its appearance, the use of earthenware has been found unsatisfactory and wherever possible good glazed china should be used, but this should be withdrawn immediately when chipped or cracked. The use of plastics is gaining popularity and many types compare favourably with china both in price and appearance. Tumblers made of toughened glass have many advantages over the normal type in length of service, but care should be taken when selecting the design.

The purchase of good quality cutlery is an economy, for its life is long and its appearance well repays the additional expense. Knives should have bone handles and all cutlery should be die-stamped with the name of the hospital, this latter having a deterrent effect on pilferage. To present an attractive appearance both tables and trays must carry a full range of cutlery and the use of meat knives for several purposes is one to be frowned upon. Stocks carried should consist of:—

Soup spoons	Small and butter knives
Dessert spoons	Fish knives
Tea spoons	Large forks
Mustard spoons	Dessert forks
Meat or large knives	Fish forks

The selection of condiment sets is a controversial point but the screw-topped glass types have many advantages and lead undoubtedly in the matter of appearance. In addition to the usual run of plates, etc., an item which has come to the fore in recent times is the stainless steel ice cup, the life of which continues ad infinitum. It has many uses for individual trifle, ices, coupes, jellies, etc., and adds considerably to their appeal.

Cooking utensils such as saucepans and stew-pans should be made of tinned copper, but these should be inspected regularly and re-tinned when required. Stainless steel is a comparative newcomer to the kitchen and has many uses for such items as basins, bowls, trays and pie dishes.

Enamel utensils should not be used under any condition in the kitchens as they chip readily, whilst aluminium vessels have lost a great deal of their popularity through their tendency to discolour badly when in contact with soda water.

Menu Planning

The objects of menu planning are to provide meals that are appetising, satisfying and nutritionally adequate. All too frequently hospital menus are monotonous and show little or no imagination, one of the chief reasons for this being the adoption of a rigid system of menu planning. Opinions differ as to how far ahead meals should be devised but under normal conditions there appears to be no reason why they should be arranged more than 24 hours beforehand. The most convenient time to do this is during the day's tour of the kitchen by the catering officer and his chef de cuisine.

All menus should provide variety and colour and the old idea of "stew on Monday", etc., is a thing of the past. Wherever possible the principal meal of the day should consist of three courses and a choice of three or four main dishes and the same number of sweet dishes. This is not always possible for patients owing to the transportation problems involved, and great thought is required to maintain a number of choices despite this handicap.

"Luncheon" and "dinner" menus should consist of soup or hors d'oeuvres, a substantial main dish of either meat or fish, followed by a sweet. Advantage should be taken of seasonal foods to provide salads and raw fruit in addition to the main menu. A comparatively recent innovation which should not be neglected is the foodstuffs prepared by the "Quick Frozen" method. This opens up a new field in menu planning, and although the apparent cost is high this is to a large extent recompensed by the fact that there is no wastage. Much has been said on the nutritional side of menu planning, but it will be found in practice that if the chef preserves the natural colour, flavour and aroma, any intelligently planned menu will contain all that is required for persons on a normal diet without recourse to analysis by a dietitian.

Service

However well-planned and cooked meals may be, inefficient service will reduce palatability and nutritive value. The ideal is to have the kitchen, service and dining-rooms in one unit, a factor which has been sadly lacking in the planning of many hospitals. The service room should be equipped with hot plates, bains marie, grills and trolleys. Emphasis must be laid on the importance of ensuring that service of food to the consumer's plate is undertaken by, or under the direct supervision of, a chef or other highly qualified person. Carelessness in service or the provision of over-large portions detracts from the appearance of the meal and goes far to kill appetite.

It is most undesirable for cooked food to be kept hot in containers, or by other means, for any length of time. This is detrimental from the nutritive and palatability viewpoints and therefore prepared foodstuffs coming from the kitchen to the service should be cooked and stored in small units. Many sweet dishes lend themselves to service in individual portions and their appearance can be heightened by the use of stainless steel coupes and other types of attractive container.

Waste

Whilst waste must be ever present it can be reduced to a minimum by careful planning. Good cooking, efficient service and careful compilation of menus will achieve this object. Beef and poultry bones should be used for stock for the preparation of soups and sauces, and all fat trimmings of meat and poultry should be rendered down for dripping. All fish bones do not lend themselves to use for fish stock; sole and turbot are, however, eminently suitable.

Although the outer leaves of the majority of vegetables may be utilised in the stock pot, vegetables which would impart a predominating flavour, i.e. turnips and swedes, should not be included. Left over vegetables, fish meat, etc., can be incorporated in made-up dishes and hors d'oeuvres. Stale bread should be dried and converted into bread-crumbs, for in this form it can be used in a variety of dishes.

Dietary Standards

Dietary standards serve as a measure in planning diets and food supplies. Standards have existed for many years, but change from time to time as knowledge increases and no standard can be considered as final.

In 1941 the "Recommended Dietary Allowances" drawn up by its Food and Nutrition Board was published by the National Research Council of the U.S.A. They represented the most authoritative survey of human nutritional requirements made up to that date and became widely accepted. A second edition of the "Allowances" was published in 1945 and a further revision was made in 1948. The accompanying table* sets out the revised 1948 figures.

The "Recommended Dietary Allowances" have been drawn up on the principle of recommending allowances sufficiently liberal to be "suitable for maintenance of good nutritional status."

They are "intended to represent exactly what is implied in a literal interpretation of the words recommended dietary allowances. Hence, in contrast to some previously promulgated standards, the data in the accompanying table are rather to be understood as representing levels of nutrient intakes which the Food and Nutrition Board recommends as normally desirable goals or objectives."

"The recommendations are not called 'requirements' because they are intended to represent not merely the literal (minimal) requirements of average individuals, but levels enough higher to cover substantially all individual variations in the requirements of normal people."

"The figures here recommended are, therefore, generally higher than average requirements but generally lower than the doses used to meet needs created by pathological states or certain environmental conditions or in compensating for an earlier period of depletion."

The recommended dietary allowances represent objectives towards which to aim in planning practical dietaries, and can be attained with a good variety of common foods which will also provide other minerals and vitamins for which requirements are less well known.

Clean Food

Greater attention has been given in recent years to cleanliness in food preparation, Ministry of Health reports and public campaigns having drawn attention to the connection between food poisoning and insanitary methods in washing up and in the actual preparation and cooking of food. Hospitals in the nature of things are not the worst offenders in these respects, but apart from really bad methods it has been shown that it is possible for apparently clean and well-run establishments to employ dishwashing machines and other equipment where the bacterial counts from utensils, dishcloths, washing up and rinsing waters were unduly high. This is often due to kitchen staff being ignorant of the proper use of mechanical equipment and of the vital importance of cleanliness wherever communal feeding is in operation.

It is not easy to obtain the active co-operation of such staff, bacteria and "germs" being unseen, unheard and therefore easily put out of mind. The usual kind of lecture or talk on food poisoning, whilst not without its uses, is of limited value without visual aids. Such aids are provided in one method of demonstration by placing knives, forks, stale food or dirty dishcloths in dishes coated with a gelatine broth which will support bacteria. At the time of application hardly any mark is to be observed on the gelatine, but after an interval for incubation a noticeable bluish fur will be found sharply outlining finger marks, and the shape of the impressions of knives, forks and other articles placed therein. Such treatment provides definite evidence of the force of the speaker's remarks.

The importance of maintaining the temperature of the water in crockery sterilising tanks at 170°F. or higher is paramount. This temperature will kill a high proportion of bacteria and will eliminate the need for a drying cloth.

Poor results can be obtained from perfectly satisfactory dishwashing machines, surveys reported in the Monthly Bulletin of the Ministry of Health and Public Laboratory Service having shown that this can come about through lack of care in the running of the machines, of which the most important examples are allowing the temperature to drop, and so killing insufficient bacteria in the washing and rinsing processes, and failure to use correct detergents, ordinary soap and soda being unsuitable for removing grease from crockery and the insides of machines.

CLEANERS AND CLEANING

In selecting cleaning materials, it should be borne in mind that the greater part of the cost of keeping a hospital clean is represented by wages and that cleaning agents which are apparently cheap may in fact in the long run turn out to be expensive because they may call for greater expenditure of labour than a cleaning agent which is at first appearance more expensive.

Although it is advantageous to keep down to a minimum the number and varieties of cleaning agents used in the hospital it is important to bear in mind that certain cleaners although excellent if used for the purpose for which they are intended have a deleterious effect on some materials. Cleaning preparations which contain a great deal of free alkali have a destructive effect on rubber tile, marble and cork, and strong soda causes swelling of linoleum and perforation of marble surfaces. Paint is also adversely affected by free alkali which acts as a form of paint remover, and this should be borne in mind when walls are washed down.

For special methods of cleaning various kinds of flooring materials, see Flooring.

Polishes

Polishes containing hard wax are generally recommended as superior to soft wax products because the latter tend to be slippery and to smear easily. Because of their soft surface they attract dirt and dust and do not provide a good hard wearing surface. A good polish has to be moist enough to remove dirt and have enough solid wax present to ensure a good film. This film should be hard enough to resist easy scratching or marking. It should be dust resisting (non-tacky) and waterproof. Although it is claimed by some manufacturers that their polishes are non-slip this cannot be true in an absolute sense, but only in so far as some are less slippery than others.

Labour and Labour-Saving Equipment

It is essential to use good and reliable labour on cleaning in the hospital, for although the hospital administrator may have a sound working knowledge of the requirements for each particular type of job, if the workmen or cleaners are liable to use their own methods damage may be caused to walls and floors entailing unnecessary maintenance expenditure. For all cleaning jobs definite instructions should be laid down and care should be taken to see that they are rigidly adhered to.

With the difficulty of obtaining domestic labour at present and always bearing in mind the high relative cost of the labour in relation to the work performed, consideration should be given to the use of mechanical cleaning devices wherever possible. A wide range of labour-saving devices are now on the market, electrically-operated floor polishers, vacuum cleaners, scrubbers, mopping machines, bed pan washing machines and gas or electric incinerators for disposal of bandages, etc.

Floor Polishing Machines. Floor polishing machines are made to three basic designs: (a) multi-brush machines with cylindrical brushes; (b) multi-brush machines with flat brushes; (c) single brush, with or without supplementary guiding wheels.

In general, machines of the first type are large and strongly constructed and require, for their most effective use, staff who are well trained to use the particular machine. Machines of the second type are of lighter construction and can be used by cleaners who do other work. The third type may be either large and heavy or small. Some floor cleaning machines can also be adapted for scrubbing and polishing by changing the brushes and there is a type which combines vacuum cleaning with polishing.

Sprayers. Mechanical sprayers spread polish in the form of a fine mist and with proper use can reduce the consumption of polish very substantially.

Materials. The range of materials to be supplied for cleaning purposes should be carefully scrutinised and the number of items kept to the minimum. All requirements should be considered and a standard list prepared which might include such requirements as the following:—

Wards: Soap, Bar, Soft and Toilet; Soda, Floor Polish, Furniture Polish, Steel Wool, Scouring Powder, Lavatory cleanser, Washing-up powder.

Laundry: Soap Flakes, Bar Soap, Soda Ash, Soap Powder, Soapless Detergent, Starch, Blue, Bleach, Stain removers.

Dishwashing Machines: Soapless Detergent.

Electric Floor Polishers: Polish, White Spirit.

Kitchen: Grease solvent, Soda.

The next matter is to determine the size of packs to be stocked. The range should be as limited as possible, but it would not be right only to buy in large containers and to let the stores staff break these down into the quantities needed. In some cases, this may be the best procedure—an example is spirit, which would normally be bought in bulk and repacked in smaller containers in the stores. Floor polish is also cheaper in large drums than in small tins, but it has to be borne in mind that labour needed to issue from the drums and waste and inaccuracy are usually inevitable. It has been suggested that the best course might well be to obtain polish in 7 lb. tins for ward use and perhaps in half hundredweight drums for issue to large consumers, such as the nurses' home.

(For suppliers of labour-saving devices see under appropriate head in the Subject Index of the Guide to Hospital Purchasing, page 1149.)

DECORATION

A high standard in decoration of the interior of the hospital is an essential for maintenance. That this decoration should follow an appropriate character and serve a functional purpose has for some years been the subject of scientific research, particularly in the United States. The older hospital interiors decorated in grim dark colours and even the more glaring white are familiar to everyone; that this form of decoration can be improved upon in terms of more rapid recovery for the patient and better seeing conditions for staff is claimed by the proponents of the scientific use of colour. This subject has recently been receiving a great deal more attention since the case histories of colour conditioning in factories and in other industrial applications have been carefully analysed. In the factory, claims are made that better and more work is produced and that absenteeism is reduced by colour conditioning.

Colour in the Hospital

In the hospital the scientific application of colour can supplement cleanliness and a fine appearance by a large number of additional benefits in terms of better lighting, relief from eye strain and a better mental attitude both on the part of the staff to their work, and on the part of the patients in that it conduces to more rapid recovery. As colour has the power to create a satisfying and cheerful environment so it can be made either exciting or stabilising and create moods suitable to the cases under treatment.

In existing buildings colour can be used to correct unpleasantly-shaped rooms. For example, uncomfortably long or high rooms can be given the effect of being shortened by employing warmer colours on the remoter surfaces and conversely narrow rooms can be made to appear wider by the use of cool colours. Unpleasant shapes can be corrected by banding and striping in colours, which is another form of camouflage.

Lighting

Colours are generally chosen in relation to a daylight standard, but all colouring is relative to its illumination. The customary source of light has been the gas-filled tungsten filament until recent years, but now fluorescent lighting is finding wider application. With the latter, the normal white spectrum will provide colour response reasonably close to that of daylight illumination. Tungsten lighting, however, is deficient in the daylight colours and should be compensated by the avoidance of the violet, blue and green parts of the spectrum unless used in very pale shades, otherwise the reflective value of surfaces so decorated will be inadequate.

(For further details see Artificial Lighting.)

In the development of this colour technique it has been found that ease of seeing is improved when the whole colour field is of a relatively uniform brightness. Pupillary action is then reduced to a minimum by the reduction of the necessity for constant readjustment to varying intensities of reflected light. In consequence a proper balance between paint and illumination, which can be measured scientifically, is called for to eliminate personal preferences which tend to creep in wherever decoration is concerned.

Operating Theatres and Surgical Departments

In order to relieve the surgeon's eyes from the glare of traditional white walls it has been found that bluish-greens create a softer and more uniform seeing condition. Another benefit noted from the use of these colours is that they serve as a complement to the red of human tissue and seeing is more acute for delicate surgical manipulations. These hues are also pleasanter and easier to work in when under severe mental strain. For patients' dressing-rooms green is not recommended but a warmer tone such as peach which creates a feeling of well-being.

White, with its high reflecting value, can be put to good use in such areas as linen storage rooms, sterilising rooms and the like where occupancy is infrequent and sanitary appearance is desirable. White is stated to have an encouraging effect on good house-keeping.

Wards

Two factors contribute to the decoration of wards, the psychological aspect and the orientation of the building and rooms. Warm tones tend to be stimulating and are suggested for maternity wards and others where rapid convalescence is desired. For those wards where long-stay or chronic patients are installed cool colours are claimed to achieve a passive and restful effect. With regard to orientation, this principle has long been applied in ordinary domestic colour schemes. Rooms with a north exposure can be painted in warm tones to compensate for the relatively bluish outdoor light and conversely those with a southern aspect in cooler tints to condition them against the greater intensity of light and heat. Soft colours are suggested for all these uses as they are reckoned to be more pleasant to look at and for utilitarian reasons more resistant to soiling and normal abuse.

Ante-rooms, etc.

In lobbies, ante-rooms, solariums, waiting rooms, reception rooms and those areas utilised by visitors and the personnel of the hospital a variety of colour schemes are suggested in order to avoid monotony. The emotional qualities of colour, it is said, can be utilised to stimulate or stabilise and create sensations of warmth or coolness as may be required. Warmly coloured rooms leading into cooler ones tend to break up the monotony and the results are particularly striking where different colours are utilised in adjacent areas.

For corridors which are deprived of natural daylight a simulation of outside conditions can be achieved by the use of ivory, yellow, beige or peach tones. Dining-rooms and class-rooms can also be made to contrast with the surgical departments and wards.

DOORS

In order to lessen the risk of fire, doors should not be made of soft woods but some hard fire-resistant wood such as teak. To prevent noise all doors should be fitted with an efficient door stop and catches that click as the doors close should be eliminated as far as possible.

There are two kinds of flush fitting doors, those in which there is a laminated core similar to the thicker plywoods where the laminations are at right angles to the door surface and the more normal type where there is a built up frame or framed core onto which the plywood sheets are cemented. Flush doors can be constructed solid to meet fire-resisting requirements.

Revolving doors should be made not less than 6 feet in diameter. Various types of sliding doors are on the market. It is suggested that where they are intended to slide round a curved overhead track the leaves of sliding doors should not be greater than 2 feet.

Various types of sliding folding partitions are made. These can be most useful in the nurses' home for dividing the nurses' sitting room from the sister's sitting room, then in the event of social functions the two rooms can be thrown together. When closed these doors or partitions present a completely flush flat surface. On being opened the tops and bottoms slide along small runways in the ceiling and floor so that when they are thrown back the leaves fold right back against each other and end up flat against the wall, taking up very little space and leaving the floor between the two rooms completely free.

B.S. 459, Part 1: 1944 specifies detailed dimensions for panelled and glazed wood doors for internal use. (The same dimensions are given in Part II of B.S. 459: 1945 for Flush Wood Doors.)

Door handles and hinges are specified in B.S. 459, Part I. The position of the lock mortice is standardised at 3' 3" from the tops of the door. Hinges are placed at 9" and 5' 9" from the top of the door to the top of the hinge.

ELECTRICAL INSTALLATIONS

Terms and Definitions

Ampere—unit of current or intensity of flow.

Volt—unit of electromotive force or pressure.

Ohm—unit of resistance to the flow of current.

Watt—unit of power, representing a consumption of one ampere at a pressure of one volt.

Kilowatts—1,000 Watts.

Supply

Providing reasonable tariff facilities can be obtained the hospital, unless it is remotely situated, will rarely gain by generating its own electricity supply either financially or in terms of fuel. In consequence a mains supply will make one system of wiring available for all purposes.

In Post-War Building Studies No. 11 it is stated that provision should be made for a 3-phase, 4-wire 400/230 volt A.C. electricity service derived either directly from an external system of low-tension mains, or from a transformer installed in the building which takes its supply from high-tension mains. When required, adequate and suitable space should be provided for a transformer substation chamber and for a switch and meter room. This should be so placed or insulated acoustically to reduce noise to a minimum.

Rising conductors should be run in readily accessible ducts or chases designed for the purpose, although they may form separate enclosed compartments of larger ducts for services in general. For reasons of fire risk it is desirable to use one vertical duct or chase to serve each wing of a building, the horizontal distribution of the mains to each vertical duct being effected at the level of the intake or transformer chamber. One duct per 5,000 sq. ft. is generally necessary.

With regard to horizontal installations to permanent outlet positions, P.W.B.S. No. 11 recommends the use of vulcanised rubber-insulated cable run in lug-grip-jointed welded or brazed steel conduit placed in the floor either on the shuttering or in screeding of suitable depth, or between floor blocks. All conduits should be run with convenient draw boxes—accessible either from floor or ceiling so that re-wiring may be carried out easily.

The main services to be supplied are general ward lighting (see further Artificial Lighting) operating theatre lighting and special facilities—and emergency lighting (see under Emergency Lighting), refrigeration, X-ray apparatus and space heating (see under Heating), and the staff location system (see under Internal Communications).

Wiring Systems

The conduit system consists of cables run in metal conduit and the best types are heavy gauge, screwed, welded or brazed joints or seamless, solid drawn, which are recommended for hospital work as they provide mechanical continuity and facilitate earthing of the entire system, besides having the advantage, in case of failure, of easy withdrawal and replacement.

The tough rubber covered system consists of twin or three-core cables sheathed in tough rubber. Although the system is not usually earthed all fittings should be made of insulating material. The main advantage of this system is that it can be used with the maximum of concealment where surface wiring is necessary as can lead sheathed cable. Care should be taken that there is no risk of damage to the cables.

Lead covered system. Similar to the above only the twin or three-core cables are sheathed in lead. For fire prevention reasons it should not be installed on oak beams or on new plaster.

The regulations in the field of electrical installations and wiring issued by the Institution of Electrical Engineers are set out in their publication:—Regulations for the Electrical Equipment of Buildings. Reference should also be made to B.S. 1043-1942 The Provision of Engineering and Utility Services in Buildings.

EMERGENCY LIGHTING

Some form of emergency lighting equipment is always necessary in the hospital. Failures in the normal system may occur in several ways; first a failure in the mains current, second a local fuse or other break in the circuit, or third, where a hospital generates its own supply, through some technical fault in the generating plant itself.

Emergency Systems

The most efficient system is a complete emergency lighting service utilising one of the following methods for an alternative source of current. These are a secondary connection to the public service; an emergency power-driven generator, or a set of batteries so arranged as to be constantly maintained fully charged in the event of failure. A complete auxiliary circuit should be connected to this emergency source so that all possible internal circuit failures are immediately by-passed, and essential services can be carried on. This secondary circuit should supply the operating theatre lights and a minimum number of lights in wards, corridors and so on to maintain general circulation of personnel and relieve the anxiety of the patients.

The extent of emergency lighting services in the hospital has remained a moot point apart from the vital necessity in the operating theatre. This has been mainly owing to the relatively heavy expense of alternative circuits and the rarity of general failures. If the emergency service is limited to the operating theatre it should be borne in mind that arrangements must be made to include adequate general lighting and lighting of instrument cupboards as well as the main operating theatre lighting equipment.

Battery Systems

There is a variety of methods of using batteries for emergency lighting systems—the small battery light using accumulators, which will maintain a single light, and the large batteries designed to carry a heavy load like the entire emergency circuit of the hospital. The small types of portable emergency light are mounted on a trolley with self-steering rubber-tired wheels. Both hand-operated and automatic types are available, the latter having the advantage of the light coming on instantaneously if the ordinary system fails.

Apart from such portable types the fixed battery systems offer a special service in the operating theatre. A small battery of sealed-in cells can be kept in some convenient part of the building and kept fully charged by a trickle from the mains. This lighting source can then be wired independently to the emergency lighting points provided in the shadowless operating theatre lights, and so arranged, that in the event of a breakdown, or even if the filament of the main lamp breaks, the emergency light points are automatically cut in on the battery circuit. Another type of battery equipment which differs slightly from that just mentioned, in addition to working the shadowless lamp, can also supply current for emergency lights in the theatre and adjoining corridor. This works by a current controlled relay, which in the event of failure cuts in the battery circuit which is wired to the emergency points in the operating lamp and theatre.

The advantage of this last system and the portable battery lights is that they can stand for months without loss of capacity as there are no open circuit losses, no deterioration takes place while the battery is not in use and trickle charges are not necessary.

EXPLOSION RISKS

FIRE PREVENTION

The modern hospital building owing to its ferro-concrete construction is generally speaking fire resisting, the steelwork normally being protected by concrete from the heat of fire, and doors, window frames and the like, generally made of fire resisting wood such as teak. The risk of a small outbreak taking hold in this sort of building is in consequence fairly small.

In the older type of building, however, where there is much woodwork which becomes dry in the course of time, the frequent use of lath and plaster ceilings, soft wood doors and similar inflammable material increase the risk considerably. Where this is so, fire resistant and fire-proofing paints and other materials may be applied to woodwork and other parts of the building to prevent a small fire from gaining hold of the structure. Their use, however, seems somewhat limited.

Fire Extinguishers

As a precaution against the spread of minor outbreaks of fire it is essential that all wards and departments should be provided with fire extinguishers which can be used where necessary by members of the staff. The five main types of extinguisher suitable for use in hospitals are (i) the soda acid type (extinguishing fluid discharged from container by carbon dioxide gas); (ii) the CO₂-water type (water expelled by a carbon dioxide gas cartridge); (iii) the foam type (effective for fires involving oil, paints, spirits, and other inflammable liquids, the foam generated from carbon dioxide gas in the form of bubbles with a tough, sticky skin, floating on the surface of the burning liquid and excluding the oxygen necessary to support combustion); (iv) the CO₂ gas type (from which the gas is discharged in a dense white cloud to provide a blanketing effect for burning liquids or fires in electrical equipment); (v) C.T.C. extinguishers (carbon tetrachloride used as base of a highly volatile, non-conducting extinguishing fluid, which upon contact with the flame vaporises, forming a heavy smothering blanket of gas).

Since such extinguishers have only a limited supply of extinguishing agent their correct use is essential. With the water type of extinguisher the jet should be directed into the centre of the burning mass itself and moved over the glowing part, merely to spray the flames being ineffective. With burning liquids, when foam extinguishers are used, the jet should not be directed into the liquid, but allowed to fall lightly on the surface of the burning liquid to allow the froth its maximum spreading effect; it is important to try to get the whole burning surface completely covered with foam. The method of using CO₂ extinguishers on burning liquids is to endeavour to brush the flames off the burning surface by starting at one side.

Hose Reels. These are intended for use by the hospital staff to keep larger fires at bay pending the arrival of the fire brigade and not for use where an extinguisher would be more effective.

Fire Risk Areas

Generally speaking the causes of fire are so numerous that it is difficult to lay down rules. Among the most frequent are cigarettes and matches, electric irons left on ironing boards, dresses caught in electric fires and so on.

Electrical Fittings. Rules should be made with regard to the use of electrical fittings, particularly with regard to the abuse of points and electric light sockets by the staff in living and bedrooms. All kinds of adaptors, unorthodox connections, two-way switches and the like will be used with consequent fire risk if measures are not taken to prevent such occurrences.

Fixed electric fires, provided that they have an efficient guard, are not in general so dangerous as the portable fire and the use of the latter should be discouraged.

If proper maintenance is carried out by the engineer's department on the electrical equipment it is unlikely to give any trouble or risk of fire.

Where old buildings have been acquired as nurses' homes it must be pointed out that lead covered electrical wiring must not be placed in close contact with old oak beams.

Oil Lamps and Stoves. Oil lamps and stoves should be eliminated as far as possible for they are an ever present danger of fire should they be knocked over.

Kitchen Apparatus. Although kitchen apparatus is seldom responsible for an outbreak of fire the ventilation system drawing air out of the kitchen should be periodically cleaned to see that throughout the run of the ductwork the highly inflammable grease which accumulates over time is removed. Dampers should be provided at suitable points and should be made to operate automatically by means of a fusible link which melts at relatively low temperatures. The damper will then be allowed to close and cut off the passage of flame.

Operating Theatres—Explosion Risks—See under that head.

X-Ray Department. With the use of non-inflammable film and provided electrical equipment is satisfactorily maintained, the X-ray department is unlikely to be the source of an outbreak of fire.

Boiler Houses. Boiler houses are very rarely the cause of fire because they are constantly under supervision. Care should be taken, however, to see that flues of boilers, economisers and the base of the chimney are periodically cleared of soot. Oil fuel, of course, should be stored underground away from the risk of fire. Spontaneous combustion in coal dumps can be prevented by the insertion of vent pipes in suitable positions.

Fire Organisation

Whilst immediate action should be taken to extinguish an outbreak of fire it should simultaneously be reported to some authoritative centre. This will be dependent on the size and layout of the hospital. In a large hospital instant communication should be available to the chief administrative officer, medical superintendent, matron, engineers' department and the porter's lodge. Arrangements can then be made by those responsible for the administration of the hospital and the porter can prepare for the arrival of the fire brigade. Each hospital administrator will need to work out a rigid procedure applicable in all details to his own specific needs.

Voluntary fire squads are established in many hospitals and if these are given periodic practices and training they will be able to deal with all small outbreaks rendering the arrival of the fire brigade unnecessary; even at worst they should be able to hold a fire at bay until the arrival of heavier equipment.

Alarm signals should not generally take the form of hooters or sirens as they are liable to cause panic among the patients. An alternative is an electrically operated system which sounds bells at specific points, for example, the chief administrator's, the medical superintendent's and matron's offices, the boiler house and porter's lodge (as suggested above), an indicator showing the point of origin of the call. The internal telephone system can also be used so that the person required may be located as soon as possible.

If the internal telephone system is used it can serve a very similar function to the alarm bell system. If a special fire call is given the caller can be connected with all the above points and has the advantage of being able to describe the nature of the outbreak.

FLOORING

The main considerations to be borne in mind in the selection of flooring materials are cost, durability, appearance, ease of cleaning and maintenance, comfort in walking and non-slip properties.

In addition the quality of service given by any floor is dependent, not only on its own properties, but on the skill with which the material is laid, the maintenance it receives, and the behaviour of the sub-floor.

Maintenance

With regard to maintenance, when flooring material is selected in the first place, consideration will be given to durability and ease of cleaning. Durability is relative to the type of traffic to be carried—where this is heavy some wearing is bound to occur, but if a suitable material has been used wearing will be uniform and will not make holes or cracks in the surface or harbour dust. There is not yet any satisfactory laboratory test for comparing the wearing qualities of widely different types of flooring so that for the most part comparison depends on practical experience of the materials in use. It is emphasised that, because of this, no completely reliable opinion can yet be given about the wearing qualities of such new types of flooring material as the following, some of which are little beyond the experimental stage, while although others have been in use for some time, information about their qualities is incomplete: polyvinyl chloride sheet and tile, cork carpet with a rubber binder, hardboard sheets, wood block mosaic set in magnesite cement, magnesite composition incorporating small pieces of hardwood in the mix, resin-bonded sawdust boards or tiles and a linoleum-like material based on a synthetic resin and containing no linseed oil.

Uneven wear in the form of indentations caused by the legs of beds or other heavy furniture spoils the appearance of a floor and this cannot always be prevented by using a sufficiently hard finish, since that may be incompatible with other characteristics which make the floor comfortable. Permanent dents may be prevented by increasing the area of contact with the floor, e.g. by using load-spreading cups under the legs of furniture. Proper maintenance treatment carried out regularly lengthens the life of any type of flooring, while hard scrubbing or the use of unsuitable polishes will seriously damage many types. The degree of cleaning required will depend partly on the situation—ward, operating theatre or corridor, and so on, while the attention a floor can receive must in some cases be limited by the amount of labour available. Care must be taken to see that the form of cleaning used does not produce slipperiness. A slippery condition may be caused by too much polishing, by using the wrong type of polish or even by washing with soap.

Asphalt Tile or Mastic Tile

Mastic tile is attractive in appearance and not expensive to install. It is manufactured in many sizes and colours and has an asphalt base. It is resilient, but is liable to be marked fairly easily by heavy furniture with small bearing surfaces, which will leave small pits in the surface. These, if not severe, may in many cases be ironed flat, but there is always the danger of changing the colour. With regard to colour, the darker ones, owing to their higher asphalt content, are better wearing than light which, although they do not show foot-marks so easily, are liable to be stained more readily. Light colours are also more expensive.

A firm sub-floor, such as concrete is necessary, and in order to prevent breakage and loosening of the tiles they should be of an adequate thickness.

Cleaning. Sweeping and washing with water and waxing when necessary with a type of wax recommended by the makers will keep mastic tiles in good condition. As oils and petrol attack asphalt, oily substances and soap should not be used for cleaning.

Asphalt

A very similar flooring to the mastic tile above as regards wear. Oils affect asphalt in the same way. It tends to wear unevenly.

Ceramic Tile

Ceramic tile is resistant to damage, stains, grease, oil and chemicals. Its long life offsets the expense of installation to a large extent. It is most advantageously used in wet places, bathrooms, operating rooms, steriliser rooms and where a hard surface is most useful. Patterned and coloured varieties of tiles can be obtained. In bathrooms it is essential to use tiles with a high abrasive content to prevent the danger of slipping.

Cleaning. Ceramic tile is easily cleaned. Strongly acid or alkaline cleaners should not be used, for although they will not affect the tiles, damage is caused to the cement settings. Soap should not be used as it tends to leave a greasy film enabling dirt and dust to adhere.

Concrete

Concrete is the cheapest type of floor, but needs skilful laying and curing by frequent powdering. Although colours can be added before mixing they tend to fade. There are two disadvantages, first a tendency for dust to collect, and second for cracks to appear. These cracks can be repaired but spoil the floor's appearance. Its use is mainly restricted to store rooms, basements, engine rooms and where there is heavy traffic. It is also useful as a sub-floor on which other types of flooring such as rubber, mastic or cork can be directly laid. Paint may be used on concrete flooring, but if there is much traffic it has to be applied frequently.

Cleaning. Although sweeping is generally sufficient in the majority of cases, water should be used if necessary. Soap may be used or an abrasive powder with water. Generally speaking, however, soap is to be avoided as it tends to leave a greasy deposit. Stains are difficult to remove from concrete.

Cork

Cork is an expensive flooring material, but is very silent in use. Cork tiles are made by heating and compressing granulated cork and are available in several textures and shades of brown. Tiles vary in thickness but can be obtained up to 18 ins. square. They are fixed in the same way as linoleum and some varieties have tongued and grooved edges for added security in laying. Surfaces are sanded off and polished.

Cleaning. Cork is difficult to maintain as it wears away fairly easily under heavy traffic; polishes recommended by the manufacturers should be used.

Linoleum

Linoleum is perhaps more generally used in hospitals than any other kind of flooring. It is made of ground cork and linseed oil, gums, resins and pigments. Both coloured and patterned linoleum is obtainable and is inexpensive. It is comfortable to walk on and sound-absorbing. Pits and scratches can be avoided if furniture is not mounted on gliders or castors, but it needs careful maintenance if long life is to be obtained. Linoleum in tile form or cork tiles are not in general favour although damaged areas can be replaced fairly readily if these are used.

Painted back linoleum should only be used on wood floors. Plain backed is necessary for fixing to concrete as a strong resinous cement is used for fixing. Linoleum must not be laid on a concrete floor in direct contact with the ground unless there is a continuous asphalt or similar damp course.

B.S. 810: 1938, specifies linoleum in thicknesses ranging from 1.90 to 6.70 millimeters: cork carpet in thicknesses of 2.50 to 8.00 millimeters.

Cleaning. Sweeping with hair brooms or oil mops keeps linoleum clean. If it is necessary to wash the floor, lukewarm water should be used and a little neutral soap may be added. Some hospitals wax their linoleum floors more frequently than every six months. Linoleum floors may be treated with occasional oiling—e.g. with linseed oil—instead of being polished.

Marble

Marble paving slabs are usually $\frac{3}{4}$ in. to 1 in. in thickness and may be obtained finely sanded or finely gritted. It is expensive, but has a fine appearance and good wearing qualities.

Cleaning. As dirt does not cling easily to marble, cleaning is comparatively easy. Sweeping, with occasional mopping, will be adequate to keep it clean. Ammonia, strong alkali, acids and abrasives should be avoided.

Quarry Tile

Quarry tile is less expensive than ceramic tile but has the same length of life. It is considered very suitable for kitchens, cafeterias, dining rooms, X-ray rooms and dark rooms. Those parts of the floor surrounding steam cookers should be specially watched and preserved as cement erodes in steam. Its use should be avoided in wet places because of a tendency to become slippery.

Cleaning. Quarry tile is easily cleaned, but becomes slippery when wet.

Rubber

The low cost of maintenance and long life of rubber flooring to a large extent outweighs the high cost of installation. It is both beautiful and durable and is obtainable in a wide variety of marbled and plain colours. Rubber is suitable for heavy traffic as the flooring maintains itself by expansion and contraction. If it is little used it tends to crack and oxidise. It needs to be protected from heavy weights and furniture should be fitted with gliders of a size proportionate to its weight.

Concrete makes a good sub-floor and the rubber should be laid in large continuous sheets as smaller sizes tend to come away from the concrete. A rubber mastic cement is used for fixing to either wood or concrete surfaces.

Cleaning. Soft soaps containing free alkali or soap liquids containing oils, e.g. turpentine or pine oil, or pastes containing abrasives should not be used for cleaning rubber floors. Petrol, benzine, naphtha and paraffin attack the material and make it soft and sticky and may cause bleeding of colours. They may, however, be used to remove stains if they are quickly wiped off.

Before washing, loose dirt should be brushed away and then the floor may be washed preferably with a mop or cloth. The water should be changed frequently; whether warm or cold should be used depends on the type of cleanser. An excessive amount of water should never be used as it may creep between the joints of the flooring and affect its adhesion to the sub-floor. After washing the floor should be dried as quickly as possible as this improves the sheen. When mechanical washers are employed care should be taken to see that the machine is not too heavy or abrasive in action as this may open the joints in the floor.

Polishes containing organic solvents are detrimental to rubber. A wax emulsion polish should therefore be used. Polishing should be done in sections so that traffic is not suspended while the sections are drying, which takes 5-30 minutes depending on atmospheric conditions and the polish employed. Polish should be spread lightly with a clean cotton pad and not be rubbed into the floor. When the polished floor becomes dirty the loose dirt should be removed with a broom and the floor wiped with a cloth moistened with clean cold water. No cleaner should be used as this will remove the polish. Cleansers and polishes should always be of a type approved by the manufacturers of the flooring material.

Terrazzo

Terrazzo is made of granulated marble or granite mixed with either white, grey or coloured portland cement. It may either be laid on the spot or obtained in various pre-cast forms. It is inexpensive and durable but is non-resilient. Terrazzo is a suitable flooring for lobbies, operating theatres and wards. It has wide uses as a base or border for other types of flooring such as linoleum or rubber, which can be laid down on the central track of a terrazzo covered ward. If it is not well laid it is liable to crack.

Cleaning. A neutral soap solution should be used for cleaning. Acids and strong alkalis affect the surface.

Wooden Flooring

The more commonly used woods for flooring are oak and maple. Both have a good appearance and can be used either as planks of uniform width or as parquet blocks. The effective wearing depth of a block is only the depth from the surface to the uppermost portion of any keying or locking device. In B.S. 1187 this is specified as $\frac{3}{4}$ in. When it is laid the pores of the wood should be sealed and after sandpapering the surface treated with shellac or varnished, and stained. Careful maintenance is necessary to obtain the best life from wooden floors.

Cleaning. Sweeping with a hair broom followed by an oiled mop is an effective method of cleaning wooden floors. Scrubbing with warm water and soap is not recommended.

FUELS

Although the choice of fuels is at present restricted, in normal times the principal question for the hospital is whether the steam boilers are to be hand-fired, provided with mechanical stokers or with automatic stokers. Each of these types of firing requires a different grade of coal, and the decision will be based on the capital cost of the equipment, relative prices of grades of coal and cost of stoking labour. Few hospitals need the attendance of more than one stoker at the boiler house at one time. Automatic and mechanical stoking do not enable the stoker to be dispensed with entirely for they are designed with the object of correctly distributing to the fire grate the fuel provided.

The size of the plant, working conditions and other specific factors needing individual assessment will determine the choice of hand firing, mechanical or automatic stoking. Anthracite or coke burning boilers of various types of the sectional pattern are general and are occasionally fitted with automatic stokers. Although automatic as regards temperature control, etc., they need skilled attention for the removal of ashes and clinker.

Oil firing during the war years was to some extent helped out by burning creosote and creosote pitch mixtures; non-automatic equipment was adapted to burn these fuels adequately. Automatic plants, however, have not so far been completely adapted to burn these fuels satisfactorily. Oil presents many advantages in that storage space needed is less than for solid fuels; also there is a general absence of dust and dirt associated with solid fuels, and plant can readily be adapted to meet fluctuating demands according to hospital conditions.

Solid Fuels

Solid fuels, coal and coke for example, are generally the most economical in relation to heat units available per unit of cost. Storage space, however, is an important consideration, and removal of waste provides another problem. Some labour costs must always be allowed for in estimating costs in spite of automatic stoking.

Automatic stoking and thermostatic control are important developments in the working of solid fuel boilers for they ensure ease of working, uniform temperatures and a saving of fuel.

Fuel Oil

Fuel oil is generally more expensive on the basis of heat units available per unit of cost than solid fuels. Except on large installations, little attention is required by this type of equipment and then only at infrequent intervals. Equipment may be automatic, semi-automatic or hand-controlled. The usual operation method, however, is by thermostatic control governed by room and boiler temperatures.

Underground storage is usual, but must be at a reasonable level for supply to the burners either by pumps or gravity. Certain local authority requirements need to be fulfilled for oil storage. These are also necessary for insurance purposes.

Gas Firing

The use of gas firing appliances in hospitals is generally restricted to relatively small plants because the cost of gas is higher than that of solid fuels. The advantage, however, is that there is no need for constant attention and labour charges are reduced. Thermostatic controls and other devices enable the plant to be operated almost automatically and waste reduced to a minimum. Gas firing is convenient for the heating of hot water radiators in isolated buildings such as clinics which are used only occasionally or at special times. Automatic controls can then be arranged so as to cut in the installations on the days and at the times required. Gas fired boilers can be obtained suitable for any size of installation.

Electricity

The relatively high cost of current has so far prevented the wide use of electricity in steam raising boilers for hospitals. Where electricity is available at low rates it has certain advantages and can present an economic method of heating. Steam raising boilers automatically controlled and consuming electricity direct from high-tension mains at 6,600 volts are practical units. They do not require any attention beyond occasional inspection and internal cleaning as control is completely automatic. Another advantage is the complete absence of a boiler house chimney and the dirt and dust associated with other fuels. Electricity at very low rates is generally restricted to certain hours of the day and even to months of the year. Hospital services in these circumstances could not be maintained at all times with high voltage electrode boilers.

FUEL STORAGE SPACE REQUIREMENTS AND CALORIFIC VALUES

Fuel	Cu. ft. per ton	Calorific Value B.Th.U.s per lb.	Heat Stored in Therms per cu. ft.
Anthracite ..	40	14,500	8
Bituminous Coal	45	12,000	6
Coke	90	12,000	3
Oil	40	18,500	10

The thermo-electric storage system on the other hand has the advantage that current may be taken under off-peak load conditions at very low rates and the heat derived from the boilers may be stored in suitable storage vessels so as to make the heating, hot water supplies and steam available throughout the day. The capital cost of these installations is high.

Fuel Economy

A main consideration in choosing the type of fuel is the price per therm of the crude fuel and potential heat contained in it, that is, without allowing for the amount that is lost in transmission or by the method of combustion. Making the best use of the heat depends on the arrangement of the installation, the type of appliance and the amount of work required to operate it.

It is necessary to bear in mind the wide variations between costs of different forms of heating and also the economies that may be effected by using the appropriate fuel, although of course, an expert should be consulted before money is laid out on special equipment. Although such equipment may be expensive, if it burns cheaper fuel it may within a short time result in substantial savings.

When estimating the cost of heating an actual room or department, it is necessary to allow for incidental costs. There is a loss of about five per cent. in transmitting heat in the form of hot water or steam from the boiler plant to the place of use, and where solid fuel is used there may also be a small increase in cost on account of the labour used. The extent of labour costs in the latter case depends largely on whether the fuel is conveyed and fired mechanically or by hand.

The consumption of fuel is necessarily lower in hospitals where the heating is centralised than in those where it is dispersed. The cost of producing a therm of heat from solid fuel burned in a boiler is lower than with other fuels, so it is an economy to use heat produced in this way as far as possible. Hand operated steam plants may not be practicable in, for example, hospitals with less than 150 beds, where skilled labour is not available and where the demand for steam is anyhow comparatively small. But the availability of small automatic equipment makes possible the use of steam in all hospitals.

Hospitals with approximately 1,000 beds or more may find it desirable to install plant which supplies both their heat and power needs. Where electricity is generated at the hospital for lighting and power purposes and the exhaust steam is used for central heating, hot water, sterilising, cooking and so on, the electricity becomes more or less a by-product of the steam. Success here depends upon the complete utilisation of the exhaust steam. Some difficulty may be experienced during the summer in balancing the power and heat loads and precautions must be taken if the inequality of the two loads becomes too great. A method of equalising the fluctuation of power and heat loads is by the thermal-storage superheated hot-water system, by which the heat in the exhaust steam is stored until it can be used.

Increases in use of a hospital and building extensions may make it necessary to add to existing installations, and there is also a recurring need to bring old equipment up to date. When once heating apparatus has been installed, it is generally difficult and sometimes impossible to make it carry an increased load, and there may be no alternative to bringing in new equipment. As a result, hospitals which have grown in size sometimes have a number of separate installations, some modern and efficient and others out of date. With such a set-up it is bound to be difficult to supply an efficient service throughout the whole hospital.

Economy depends not only on producing and distributing heat efficiently, but also on avoiding loss of heat during use. Precautions must be taken to maintain a high thermal efficiency of the whole plant; with certain types of boiler it is desirable to consider using an economiser to extract as much heat as possible from the furnace gases before they pass into the chimney.

Economisers installed with a new plant may reduce fuel consumption by about 10 per cent., but whether the addition of an economiser to an existing installation would be a true economy must depend on the cost of erection and the degree of economy which it is estimated will be achieved.

Since the average temperature in this country is above the minimum at which a heating installation is designed to operate full capacity, the system is generally working at only about 60 per cent. of its maximum output, which makes it necessary, in order to avoid overheating, to deal with fluctuations in external temperature. The best means of doing this is the use of automatic temperature control which can be employed either at the source of heat distribution or at the point of utilisation. This can reduce fuel consumption for space heating by about as much as 20 per cent.

The information given in this section comes principally from the publications of the Coal Utilisation Council, which body is pleased to give assistance on matters relating to fuel economy.

GAS

Supply

The position regarding the supply of gas is regulated by the Gas Regulation Act of 1920 and a minimum pressure in the mains of 2 ins. is imposed by the Acts of 1929, 1932, and 1934. Generally speaking, however, the working pressure is kept at 3 to 3½ inches. Supplies are always metered and unlike water companies the supply may be cut off after due notice if accounts are not paid. Gas is charged for on the basis of the therm. The gas authority is required to declare the calorific value per cubic foot of the gas it supplies.

Whilst generally speaking technical requirements are not laid down with regard to fittings, the suppliers endeavour to maintain services as far as possible themselves. There is a tendency, however, for internal services to be extended without any notification to the gas undertaking, and in consequence it may ultimately be found that the incoming main is inadequate. If substantial additions are planned it is always advisable to consult the gas authority before the work is begun. The service mains into premises are the property of the consumer and it is his responsibility to maintain them.

Definitions

Therm. The therm is a unit of heat value of 100,000 British Thermal Units. It is the unit by which gas is sold to the consumer under the provisions of the Gas Regulation Act, 1920, which provides that the calorific value of the gas has to be declared (under the previous method gas was charged for per thousand cubic feet). If the declared calorific value of the gas is 500 B.Th.U.s. per cubic foot it follows that 200 cu. ft. will comprise one therm.

Service Pipe. The pipe between the authorities main and the cock or valve controlling the supply to the consumer. Sizes depend on the consumption of gas required, the length of run and pressure available and vary from 1 inch for a small house to 12 inches and more for larger institutions.

High Capacity Meters

Meters should not be fitted in proximity of cables or electrical apparatus and the main cock must be near its inlet and easy of access in case of fire. The present range of high capacity meters of 700, 1,200, 1,800, 3,000, 4,500, 6,000, 9,000 and 12,000 cu. ft. hour respectively are suitable for installation in larger buildings.

Gas Fires

With regard to the installation of gas fires Post War Building Study No. 6 recommends that if a gas fire is to be fitted on a floor not formed of fire-resisting material conforming with B.S. 476: 1932, a hearth or slab of incombustible material conforming with the standard should be laid flush with or on the floor. Points for portable heaters should be fitted with a tap of the bayonet fitting plug type complying with B.S. 570: 1934, or with a suitable safety device which has the approval of the gas authority.

GLASS

Specifications

When glass is ordered it should be stated that all glass is to be of the type, quality and substance specified. Glass should be described by the recognised trade name, thicknesses and qualities, because of the wide variety of types manufactured.

Types of Glass

Sheet Glass. As sheet glass is a fire-finished product the two surfaces are never perfectly flat or parallel, which accounts for a certain amount of distortion of vision. These properties affect its uses and it is generally specified only where window openings are designed to take small panes (4 to 5 ft. super).

THICKNESSES

18 oz. (approx. 1/12")	26 oz. (approx. 1/8")
24 oz. (approx. 1/10")	32 oz. (approx. 5/32")

Polished Plate Glass. This type of glass is recommended where clear undistorted vision is required and the exterior appearance of a building is under consideration. The two surfaces are ground, smoothed and polished with the object of making the two surfaces parallel to provide undistorted vision. The normal thickness for glazing, 1/4 inch, is approximately three times as strong as the normal sheet glass 24 oz. used for windows. It also gives higher sound insulation. Three qualities are available GG for ordinary glazing, S.G. for selected glazing and S.Q. for silvering quality.

Armourplate. This is a suitable glass for partitions in children's wards and mental hospitals as clear vision is provided with the additional safety factor inherent in this type of glass. It is manufactured from clear polished plate glass by a technique of heating and sudden cooling which results in a strong compression in the two outer surfaces with tension in the centre. If broken it is said to disintegrate into innumerable small pieces not sharp enough to cause serious injury. It also has great resistance to sudden temperature changes.

SIZES AND THICKNESSES

Thickness	Length	Width
3/16"	51"	25"
1/4"	70"	52"
5/16", 3/8"	82"	70"
1/2"	82"	70"
5/8"	70"	52"
3/4", 7/8"	} available up to 8 sq. ft.

Wired Glass. This type of glass is approximately 1/4 in. thick and has a fine wire mesh embodied in the middle and is useful for safety purposes and is fire resistant. There are two types, translucent and transparent.

The translucent types are Georgian Wired Cast which is reinforced with fine 1/2 in. square mesh wire electrically welded at the intersections: Wired Cast which is reinforced with 7/8 in. hexagonal mesh wire and Wired Arctic a figured rolled glass with a 7/8 in. hexagonal mesh wire. These types are used for roofs and wherever additional protection is needed.

The transparent types are used in public buildings for windows, doors, etc., wherever clear vision is required together with additional protection. The types are Polished Georgian Wired reinforced with 1/2 in. square mesh wire electrically welded at the intersections and Polished Wired reinforced with 7/8 in. hexagonal meshed wire.

Prismatic Glass. This is a translucent rolled glass of which one surface is comprised of prisms arranged to refract passing light in a desired direction according to the incidence of light. The other surface is flat. Three angles of prism are made, the first for where the angle of light incidence from the horizontal is up to 30°, the second for angles between 30° and 40°, and the third for angles over 40°. It is useful for glazing windows which are overshadowed by neighbouring buildings. It is made in only one quality in sizes up to 60 in. high by 100 in. wide with the prisms running with the width of the sheet.

Cathedral. This is a translucent rolled glass one surface of which has a texture or pattern for use in bathrooms, kitchens, lavatories, etc. The sizes are 100 in. to 120 in. by 36 in. to 42 in. The normal thickness is $\frac{1}{8}$ in., but $\frac{3}{16}$ in. and $\frac{1}{4}$ in. are also available in some types.

Vita Glass. This type of glass which permits the passage of ultra-violet rays is obtainable in clear sheet of 1/10 in. thickness, also Cathedral and Georgian Wired.

Toughened Lenses. The use of toughened lenses is in roof and vertical panel lights and in all types of reinforced concrete construction where light transmission is required. The lenses which are 6 in. square by 2 in. thick have the same characteristics as armour plate glass and are claimed to expand if broken and so exert a lateral thrust thereby maintaining their position. For this reason they are said to provide an effective fire barrier.

Glass Blocks. These are translucent units made in two halves and sealed together. They are claimed to be good for thermal insulation, sound insulation and to be fire resistant. Their use is for external or internal walls, staircase lights, panels, bays, partitions and wherever light is required with privacy. The brick sizes are 5 $\frac{1}{4}$ in. by 5 $\frac{1}{4}$ in. by 3 $\frac{7}{8}$ in.; several types of corner bricks are available.

HEATING

(See also Ventilation)

The generally agreed temperature necessary for comfort in hospital wards is 65°F and in domestic parts of buildings around 60°F. and these temperatures should be available when the outside temperature falls as low as 28°F. The maintenance of an adequate internal temperature is dependent upon the method of ventilation, the rate of air change and rate of loss of conducted heat from the building. The general practice in hospitals is to make allowance in designing a heating system for the complete change of air three times an hour (except in special areas, e.g. operating theatres, etc. for which the requirements are tabulated below). Insulation against heat loss from the building is another vital requirement for two reasons—first, reduction in running costs and second, the economising of fuel supplies

Insulation

The structural insulation of buildings against heat loss is of great importance now that the national fuel resources must be conserved and the greatest heating value obtained from a smaller quantity of fuel than has been available in the past. It has been estimated that between 75 and 80 per cent. of all heating to maintain comfortable temperatures in a building is required to make good the loss of heat through walls, floors and roofs. The estimated addition to the structural cost of a building with efficient structural insulation is about 3 per cent.

There are three ways of heat transmission, radiation, conduction and convection. Radiation loss is prevented by fitting a smooth and bright aluminium foil to reflect back radiant heat. Conduction of heat is slowed down by using a thin quantity of insulating material (heat will be conducted through a nine inch brick wall approximately three times as fast as through one inch of good insulating material).

In Post-War Building Study No. 19 are suggested maximum values of thermal transmittance. Detailed figures on the thermal transmittance values of various types of building materials will be found in The Computation of Heat Requirements for Buildings. Methods of Heating

To attain the required temperatures in all units of the hospital the only practical method is some centralised installation. In England hot water is generally accepted as the most satisfactory method. In America, on the other hand, steam appears to be preferred because of the greater fluctuations in temperature and the fact that steam being at 212°F. has a greater store of heat immediately available for the rapid raising of indoor temperature. In England, even with low pressure of vacuum steam heating the surface temperature of the heating unit is relatively high and leads to a drying of the atmosphere. Another disadvantage of some steam systems is that they are liable to be noisy.

With buildings more than 75 ft. in height a difficulty arises, however, with hot water installations as the static pressure in the pipes (0.434 lbs. per foot of height) requires far more solid and robust construction than for steam and is in consequence more expensive.

There are two principal methods of heating by hot water, first, heating coils embedded in the plaster of ceilings and walls (the invisible panel system) using the principle of radiation to heat the building, and secondary heating units generally known as radiators using the principle of convection.

Invisible panel system.—The great advantage of this system is that it is entirely hidden in the walls and ceilings beneath the plaster, thereby adding greatly to the appearance of wards in the absence of visible pipes and heating apparatus. In 1938, the British Hospitals Association published the results of a survey carried out in hospitals using this system of heating and the main advantages brought to light were: floor and wall space left free from obstruction, less labour in cleaning and less chance of cross infection due to convection currents. Lack of heated surfaces on which dust can settle and the resulting drop in redecoration costs owing to lack of convection currents blackening the walls were interesting points.

It was found that over a period of twenty years there had been no failures of embedded coils where mild steel piping had been used and cracking was limited to the paint film, except where unsuitable plaster had been used. There was no reason to suspect internal corrosion or scaling as there is no evaporation or replacement of water in the coils.

Radiator Systems.—The radiator system has an advantage in being quicker in bringing about desired temperatures as it works by convection and heating the entire body of the air. In new constructions it is possible to conceal a large measure of the pipework, but in general it is not advised because it is difficult of access for repairs and maintenance.

Hot Water Heating Temperatures.—The recommended operating temperatures for invisible panel systems is not above 130°F. as above this figure trouble is met with the plaster ceiling coils and the radiant effect becomes unduly fierce.

Hospital pattern radiators are found in practice to operate successfully at not more than 150°F. and preferably not more than 140°F. as this gives a reasonable margin.

In very cold weather the circulating water temperature can be raised to 160°F. At temperatures above this unnecessarily high local temperatures are caused and a certain amount of drying of the air.

Space Heating.—For temporary buildings, out-patient departments, waiting rooms and areas of the hospital not connected to the central hot water or steam heating system some form of electrical space heating may be found suitable. The common feature of this type of heater is that the heat (which emanates from "black" elements) circulates according to the principles of convection and is distributed equitably through the room. Some of these heaters embody the principle of radiation as well being panels which fit on the centre of a wall. Apart from radiant heat from the heating panel, hot air is circulated quickly and the room is rapidly raised in temperature and then subsequently the degree of heating may be reduced by half.

Heating Special Departments

Operating Theatres.—It will be seen from the chart given above of temperatures for various units of the hospital, that 80°F. is required in the operating theatre. Although this temperature may not always be required it must be attainable. A heating system maintaining this temperature must be associated with an adequate ventilation system otherwise unsatisfactory conditions will result. A suitable mechanical ventilating plant is therefore necessary. Until recently steam has been favoured because of the short time in which the required temperature can be reached, but perhaps hot water panel systems are preferable where theatres are in constant use because as has been stated above there is less likelihood of the atmosphere being dried too much.

These considerations as well as questions of appearance and cleanliness have recently led to the adoption of complete air-conditioning plants. Fresh air drawn from the outside atmosphere through suitable filters, and if necessary warmed by passing it over a heating element, is introduced into the theatre by means of an electrically-driven fan through ducts at the top of the theatre opposite the north light window. An extract fan operating at a slightly lower rate enables the pressure inside the theatre to be maintained slightly above that prevailing outside so that vitiated air is not drawn in through windows and under doors, but warm fresh air under pressure forced out at these places. Humidity control does not appear necessary in the United Kingdom.

Premature Babies Rooms.—Temperatures of 80°F. to 85°F. are required in premature baby rooms where the temperature very often needs to be controlled within very fine limits, as little as 2°F. variation. Humidifiers are also needed. As the size of these rooms is generally small extensive mechanical equipment is not required and electrical methods are satisfactory as they are flexible and capable of very accurate control.

X-Ray Rooms.—Although the temperature required in deep therapy rooms is not so high (65°F.) as required in operating theatres, heating is best provided by warm air inlet and extracted by electric fans as suggested in air conditioning for operating theatres.

Open Air Wards.—In open air wards in sanatoria, generally speaking the head and upper portions of the patients most need keeping warm therefore some form of radiant heating is suggested. Surface panel radiators on the wall or ceiling appear to be satisfactory. Suitable electric radiator panels would also meet these needs.

INTERNAL COMMUNICATIONS

Telephones

Planning

The first decision to be made in planning an internal telephone system in a hospital is whether a Post Office installation should be used for both internal and external calls, or, alternatively, whether two systems should be used, one for internal calls only, the other for both internal and external calls.

The Post Office and the telephone manufacturers both supply manual or automatic internal systems, of all sizes. An automatic system is more expensive in itself, but is likely to be economical in that it saves operating staff and gives a quicker service. Manual systems may be economical in temporary buildings or where service is required during limited hours; they may also have advantages if calls to and from the public exchange system are much more frequent than internal calls. For ordinary hospitals automatic systems are likely to be preferable, since a quick service throughout the twenty-four hours is needed and the ratio of internal calls to external calls is comparatively high. A survey was carried out a few years ago on the telephone needs of 200 hospitals, large and small, and the conclusion reached was that out of every 100 calls 85 were found to be purely internal and 15 external. In the same survey it was found that on the average 2 per cent. of the extensions were needed for external calls only, 78 per cent. for internal use only, and 20 per cent. for both internal and external calls.

Automatic Systems

Automatic systems fall, broadly speaking, under two heads; the direct calling or multiple cable systems, and systems working from central switching equipment. Either type requires a small manually operated switchboard to handle incoming calls from the public system (outgoing calls to the public system can generally be put through automatically) except in the case of duplicate systems not providing for outside calls.

Direct Calling

Direct calling systems consist of two or more instruments each of which is fitted with the same number of selectors (buttons or keys) as the number of extensions. Each instrument is thus its own small self-contained exchange. All the instruments are connected by means of multiple cable. A 20-line installation will need 20 buttons on each instrument and a 25-way cable. These systems are limited to small installations, and are uneconomical for serving scattered points, or for buildings in which frequent changes of wiring may be necessary because of the high cabling costs.

There are two small systems of this type that can be rented from the Post Office; one provides for one exchange line and up to five extensions, the other two exchange lines and up to ten extensions. These can, of course, be used for both internal and external calls.

Switching Installations

For larger automatic installations the switching system must be used, in which the bulky cabling of the direct calling system, interconnecting all the telephones, is replaced by individual wiring from each extension to the central automatic apparatus. An ordinary dial telephone is provided, and calls are obtained by dialling the required extension number. On systems provided by the Post Office the extension can, if required, dial straight through to the public exchange, and the dial may have either numbers only or letters and numbers according to the type of public exchange to which the installation is connected. The central automatic equipment is generally arranged so that the installation can be increased in size without recabling if additional extensions are required, and the system is therefore much more flexible than a multiple cable system of the direct calling type.

The terms under which internal telephone systems are supplied vary, and should be scrutinised carefully when the costs of various types are being examined. If the ultimate size of the installation is unlikely to exceed 50 extensions an automatic system can be obtained on rental terms from the Post Office. For larger installations to be used for outside calls as well as internal the equipment must be bought from an approved contractor by agreement with the Post Office: the Post Office will in this event supply the wiring and telephones, and maintain the whole system. The agreement with the Post Office for either small or large system will be for a period of five years. If a purely internal system is to be used, in addition to a Post Office system (manual or automatic) for outside calls, this must be obtained from a telephone contractor, who will generally maintain it. The terms of the agreement, and the period for which it will run, vary from contractor to contractor. Rental and outright purchase should be compared with care, since although it may be generally true to say that rental terms are preferable for a short period and purchase for a long period, it is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rules, and the decision must depend on the circumstances of the particular case; the quality of maintenance and the danger that purchased equipment may become obsolete over a period of years must in particular be borne in mind.

Automatic Facilities

The facilities given by various automatic systems also differ a good deal. All such systems maintained by the Post Office can provide for outside or exchange calls as well as internal calls; exchange calls can be barred on any extension as required. Access to the public network for outgoing calls is given by direct dialling; incoming calls are handled by the switchboard attendant, who puts them through to the required extension. With the latest type of equipment an incoming call can be held while the extension user, by means of a press button on his telephone, makes a call to another extension for enquiry, etc.; the extension user can then return to the incoming call and either complete it or arrange for its transfer to another line (on some types the transfer can be made automatically).

Automatic systems without access to the public exchange offer additional facilities not at present provided by the Post Office. Certain extensions can be fitted with a priority call system, which enables a principal to get through even though the extension required may be already engaged. Loudspeakers can also be fitted to extensions where it is essential that both hands should be free while the call is in progress; the loudspeaker or handset may then be used at will, the lifting of the latter automatically cutting off the loudspeaker and permitting speech to be received only in the handset receiver. Staff and code calling as well as fire alarm facilities are possible on these systems. The facilities are useful, but may not outweigh the disadvantages of having duplicated telephones and wiring.

Although, generally, an automatic system (Post Office or private) is likely to be the best for hospitals there are at present difficulties in obtaining this type of equipment. The Post Office and the telephone manufacturing industry are playing a very full part in the national export drive, and the success with which British telephone equipment can be sold overseas has led to a severe curtailment of the amount available for the home market, whether for private installations or for Post Office exchanges. It may, therefore, be necessary to arrange for the installation of manual systems as a temporary measure until automatic systems (whether connected to the public network or not) become more readily available.

Staff Location Systems

Staff location and signalling systems fall into two major categories, those which call only one place at a time and are in consequence equivalent to telephones but not so efficient, and those where several stations are called simultaneously. Of the latter method there are three types of signal, lights or indicators and bells or buzzers, also loudspeakers. Installations using all three of these types of signal in combination have been made in hospitals.

Types of System

There are three types of system employing sound and visual signals in common use for staff location which may be used in the hospital from a central station by matron, doctors or other senior officials. The signals are generally originated from the telephone operator's switchboard.

(1) Systems using a single lamp or buzzer at each signal point. These employ code signals similar to morse, necessitating the allocation of a code signal to each person who may be called. This is generally restricted to where few code signals are required. Although audible signals are more likely to attract attention, visual signals are more likely to find favour in the hospital for reasons of silence.

(2) Systems employing two, three but not more than four lamps at each signal point. These have coloured lights or illuminated stencils which may be operated in various combinations. This again necessitates the allocation to each person of a special combination, and the number of combination signals is dependent on the number of lamps included in the signal unit.

(3) The electro-magnetic indicator system. One type consists of a pointer rotating round a dial with numbers on it each number corresponding to a person to be called. A similar system can be incorporated in the electric clocks.

Before a staff location system is installed, immediate and eventual requirements should be ascertained so that plans can be drawn up showing the type of installation, the accommodation required and the chases and conduits required. A British Standard code of practice on Staff Location Systems is in course of preparation.

Patient to Nurse Systems

There is another special application of staff location in the hospital, the installation of some method of patient to nurse communication or a nurse call system. There are three basic principles, signal lights, buzzers or bells and loudspeakers, also systems employing all three in combination.

Signal Light System. In the signal light system indicators can be placed wherever the nurse is likely to be, duty room, dispensary, ward kitchen, etc. These lights register the call and show which ward is calling. In the ward itself a lamp tells the patient that his signal has been registered, while the pressure of a button when the call has been answered extinguishes all signal lights.

This type of system always has the advantage of completely silent working with the minimum disturbance of patients. There is, however, the disadvantage that the light signals can only be placed in a certain number of positions and they cannot always be seen by the nurse. In large institutions if the nurse is required by the sister she may need to telephone to receive the instructions.

Bells or Buzzer. Although bell and buzzer systems cannot fail to be noticed and have the advantage of getting round corners from which light signals are not visible they have the great disadvantage of being irritating to the nerves and increasing the noises of the hospital when every effort has been made to keep the institution as quiet as possible. Both this system and the light system have the disadvantage that the requirements of the patient need first to be found out before any action can be taken and may entail much unnecessary walking or telephoning for instructions.

Loudspeaker Systems. Loudspeaker systems can be in the form of either a two-way loudspeaker or a patient to nurse microphone and loudspeaker. One type enables the patient to speak after pressing down a switch which interrupts the wireless programme in the nurses' room and the patient's message is relayed in its place. Provision is also made for automatic light signals to be given both in the nurses' room control board and outside the patient's room. A buzzer can also be sounded when the switch is pressed upwards if a nurse is urgently required.

The second type provides two-way conversations, signal lights both outside the patient's room and at the master station, and the sounding of a buzzer at the control as well. Calls can be accumulated if more than one patient calls and answered in rotation. An earphone for private conversations, cutting out the loudspeaker, can also be used.

Finally, there is another system which has been installed as a result of an analysis of the calls in the above system where out of 4,000 calls from patients only 5 per cent. required an answer from the nurse. This is one giving verbal communication from patient to nurse only. When the patient switches on the microphone the same switch lights a signal lamp in each ward connected with the system and warns other patients that a microphone is in use. When the lamp is extinguished the circuit immediately becomes available again.

Signposting and Notices

Patients and visitors—including those on official business—are often bewildered when finding their way about hospitals. Although it is the duty of reception staff to start them on their way, the lack of adequate signposting and notices may subsequently waste a good deal of time, and be bad from the point of view of both public relations and internal efficiency.

In devising an adequate signposting system for both internal and open air purposes regard must be had to considerations of durability, neatness and visibility. Internal notices should also be hygienic and capable of being cleaned. Some features of a satisfactory system of signposting might include (i) easily seen and well-designed signs outside the hospital to help the visitor in parking his car, together with signs clearly showing the main reception points; (ii) in the reception unit a sketch plan of the hospital showing the layout; (iii) in the lobbies and corridor junctions good directional signposts pointing to all main departments and wards; (iv) sketch plans of the hospital at the lift entrances on each floor showing the floor layout.

Notices made from laminated plastic, either singly or in bulk, are likely to be satisfactory for most hospital purposes. The printed message is inserted in the process of manufacture in the laminations which form the build-up of the material, and is completely durable, the printed matter or design being in permanent form and not likely to be subject to deterioration by hard wear.

LAUNDRY

The first problem to be considered is whether it is sound policy to undertake laundry work at a hospital. In favour of doing so is the fact that responsibility for losses can be restricted to the hospital and that special hospital requirements and standards can be met and maintained. Factors weighing the other way are that it is a heavy added responsibility, bearing considerable financial implications, and that in general output per worker is not so high as in commercial laundries. The advantages have been held by many authorities to outweigh the disadvantages, and many hospitals in all parts of the country run their own laundries.

The centralisation of laundry work at various centres within a region is also a possibility, although a committee which in 1951 examined the question in one region decided that the cost would be prohibitive in present circumstances. The same committee recommended, however, that each hospital management committee should be encouraged to centralise its laundry service wherever possible.

Organisation. It is impossible to lay down hard and fast rules for guidance regarding plant lay-out as buildings and requirements differ even when an entirely new plant is under consideration. Advice, however, can be obtained from the British Launderer's Research Association or any reputable firm of laundry engineers.

The main point to be borne in mind is that broken continuity means work standing still, so work should be kept on the move. The following are the sections of the laundry in order of the flow of work in a system of "straight through flow."

Reception. The reception area should be a separate room or a clearly defined area and must be definitely maintained as such. A speedy sorting and checking flow cannot be established if sorters do not know where to find loads.

Sorting Section. Every article processed should pass through here and be counted and tabulated. The sorting room should be controlled by a person who has adequate experience of checking linen in all its phases. Speed and accuracy are essential. Classifying of any doubtful articles should be done in conjunction with the chief washroom employee.

Washing. The washroom should control the rate of flow through the plant itself and washing capacity required should be ascertained and kept up to date. This includes all processes for soiling and stain removal, also hydroin

Drying. All drying processes should be included in this section whether by continuous dryers, drying tumblers or static drying rooms, but not as is sometimes thought "airing off" after ironing.

Calendering. On the calendering machine itself six points require constant control:—

- (1) The correct steam pressure for bed(s) and roller(s).
- (2) The correct size inlets for steam.
- (3) Efficient steam trapping for condensate from bed(s) and roller(s).
- (4) Regular operation of air vents and by-passes on condensate lines.
- (5) Strict attention to clothing on rollers.
- (6) Operating speed in accordance with the prevailing conditions.

Pressing and Ironing. Presses are gradually finding favour with hospital laundries and are a necessity for speedier output with less staff and with proper control will considerably reduce operating and processing costs.

Packing. Packing is of vital importance as it can impede the flow of the whole plant. As there is a steady flow of articles through the calender so there should be a steady flow of articles being classified.

Despatch. As with reception a definite area or room should be allocated under strict control to ensure correct return of all work to its source of origin.

Laundry Costs

Various means of economy in running hospital laundry services may be suggested. An obvious need is for trained management, which supports the argument in favour of group laundries, since units should be of sufficient size to justify the salary which will attract the right type of manager. It has been suggested that laundries should take in at least 15,000 pieces weekly, and preferably 25,000 pieces (75 lb. per piece being an appropriate average weight). It is also necessary to determine and use standards in laundry work, such as the amount of linen which should be used by a hospital in relation to its size. One difficulty is to determine whether the standard should be based on the figure of beds occupied or beds available, there being arguments for both.

An increase in machine-finished work is also necessary in modern conditions. It has been found by investigators that there is still too much hand-ironing, which is uneconomical. The simplification of uniforms and the active encouragement by hospital authorities of machine-finishing are obvious measures towards economy.

Essentials of Good Washing

A satisfactory definition of good washing is the thorough removal of soiling substances from fabrics without causing damage. These factors need to be considered carefully if this is to be achieved. (1) Attention must be paid to steam and water supplies; (2) washing machine operation; and (3) use of suitable detergents.

Water and Steam

Water, to be best suited for laundries, should be softened to within 2° of zero hardness and should be available in ample quantities. A plentiful hot water supply at not less than 160°F. is also required. Steam supply should be dry and at a pressure sufficient to bring to the boil in five minutes the contents of a washing machine filled with hot water to a cage dip of 5 ins. Piping of hot and cold water and steam to each machine is an essential.

Hard water should not be used for rinsing, because although lather is killed quicker, it leaves some of the soap in the work as lime soap and may give rise to black specks in the work and the need for re-washing with consequent extra expense.

Hot water is necessary to enable washing and rinsing to be done speedily. This avoids undue rubbing of the work and reduces overhead costs by increasing the daily output of the machines, for expensive delay can be caused by heating water in the machine from cold for later washes.

Operation of Washing Machines

To guide the operator dip gauges and thermometers are essential for efficiency of working a washing machine. The dip gauge should be marked to show the maximum depth of fluid in the cage of the machine, i.e. the inner perforated cylinder into which the work is loaded. Monthly checks of dip gauges should be carried out by comparing the gauge reading with various depths of water measured by a ruler.

Laundry thermometers are usually of the mercury in steel or vapour types; for efficient working it is necessary for them so to be placed that wash and rinse liquors flow round them freely. They should be checked once a month against one of the mercury in glass or alcohol varieties and should give readings within 5°F. of the true temperature.

White Work

It has been suggested that although many institution laundries give white work (sheets, pillowslips, towels, white coats, aprons and print shirts, etc.) only one wash lasting about 30 minutes during which time the water is raised from lukewarm to boiling, the more efficient method of dirt removal is to give work two or three short washes at rising temperatures. This method removes the dirt in stages and it is claimed practically eliminates the danger of redepositing dirt on the load. If adequate steam and water supplies are available this method takes no longer than the old method.

A suitable formula for white work is:—

Operation	Dip in.	Temp. Deg. F.	Time Min.	Supplies
Break-wash	5	110	10	Soap and builder
Wash	5	150	10	" "
Boil ..	4	200	15	" "
Rinse	10	160	5	—
Rinse	10	130	5	—
Rinse	10	100	5	—
Rinse	10	70	5	(Blue)

The above times include time for draining and filling the machine, assuming supplies of hot water and steam are adequate. Drainage times of half a minute after washes and one minute after rinses are generally adequate. For radially divided D. and Y. machines these times may have to be slightly increased. One essential point, however, is to maintain an adequate lather throughout all washing operations in order to maintain in suspension dirt removed from the load.

Bleaching

A bleach will be necessary to remove many common stains like tea, coffee, etc., which will be left after using the above formula, although it is satisfactory in most cases except for heavily soiled white work. If bleach is properly used there is little to fear from loss of strength in the fabrics. In addition to removing most stains the commonest laundry bleach (sodium hypochlorite) has a very effective germicidal action, a very important factor in the hospital laundry.

Sodium hypochlorite, the commonest bleach, is usually supplied as an aqueous solution with its strength quoted in available chlorine content (usually 14 per cent.). It is often sold under brand names. The correct amount to use is from 6 to 12 ozs. of the 14 per cent. solution per 100 lbs. of load, depending on the amount of staining of the work. The upper limit of 12 ozs. per 100 lbs. of work should never be exceeded. Strong bleach should be diluted in a pail of cold water before use. The first rinse is the most effective time to use bleach and the above rinsing should be modified as given in the table above.

Rinse ..	10	130	5	—
Rinse ..	12	100	5	—
Rinse ..	12	70	5	Blue

For removal of stains unaffected by this treatment see under Stain Removal.

Thorough rinsing is essential because irritation of the skin can be caused by alkaline substances left in the finished work, also yellowing of white work during ironing.

Standard Loadings of Machines

Overloading of machines reduces the amount of agitation to which the work is subjected and prevents the production of good washing. Three-and-a-half pounds per sq. ft. is the generally accepted maximum desirable for most metal machines doing white work and three pounds per sq. ft. for wooden machines.

Woollen and Silk Articles

Gentler methods are needed to wash woollens and silks than those for linens and cottons. Dips should be increased to 10 ins. for all washes and the wash temperature should not exceed 100°F.

The formula on p. 949 is suitable for most woollens and silks. Excessive rubbing should be avoided as this causes "felting." Machines of small diameter, 34 ins. maximum, are

Soaps in the Laundry. (See also Water Softening)

The temperature in degrees centigrade at which fatty acids solidify is called the titer of a soap. Low titer soaps (under 25 deg. C) dissolve readily in lukewarm water. High titer soaps (over 35 deg. C) however, need hot water for preparing the solutions. The lather for high titer soaps can be maintained during a boil whereas low titer soaps do not give a stable lather in hot water.

Soaps for laundry purposes are usually purchased in flake or powder form, the flake soaps containing approximately 88 per cent. of pure soap and the powdered types about 92 per cent. One of the advantages of flakes and powder over the bar form, quite apart from the latter's high water content (approximately 30 per cent.), is that owing to their greater surface area per lb. they dissolve far more easily. Care should be taken not to buy a soap powder containing little real soap and a large amount of soda; for although dry to the touch it has a large water content and is consequently uneconomical.

As the initial soap operation in the laundry process is usually carried out at temperatures between 100°F. and 120°F. in order to avoid the coagulation of albuminous materials—blood or pus for example, and to avoid the setting of fruit stains, soap used in the break must be of the low titer type. The same applies for woollens and silks or fabrics with fugitive colours. For cottons and linens, however, a higher titer soap is necessary as the temperatures for hot suds operations are considerably higher, 160-200°F.

Soapless Detergents

Many varieties of soapless detergents have been developed in recent years which are suitable for use in the laundry. Among these are some which are in no way dependent for manufacture on natural fats and are manufactured from a by-product of petrol refining, and after a chemical process the resulting product is a mixture of the sodium salts of the corresponding secondary alkyl sulphates. This type of product is claimed to be most effective in low temperature washes such as for woollens and coloured cloths, and can be used without any loss of efficiency in hard water.

LIFTS

In the hospital there is the nature of the traffic to be taken into consideration, with regard to lift installation. Cars may be required to deal with stretchers and accompanying attendants, also beds, wheel-chairs or other cumbersome articles, consequently an internal car size of 7 ft. × 3 ft. is desirable with 6 ft. 8 ins. × 2 ft. 6 ins. as an absolute minimum. For normal passenger traffic the space required per passenger is estimated at 1½ to 2½ sq. ft.

There is a wide choice among available makes and each maker has his own method of achieving controls and designs to suit specific hospital needs. With bed lifts the important considerations are: smooth starting and stopping, not too rapid acceleration, and that it should be as silent in operation as possible both with regard to the motor and the doors and gates.

Regarding speed it is suggested that about 150 ft. per minute is the most suitable for bed lifts, but for staff and passengers about 200 ft. per minute appears to be adequate where the building is limited to two or three floors.

Control Methods

The internal push button method from within the car appears the most suitable method of control for hospital purposes as the lift can then be used by anyone day or night and few hospitals are in a position to need a full time lift attendant. Care must be taken to see that locking arrangements are adequate and that once the car has started its journey all gates are automatically locked and the car cannot be intercepted on an intermediate floor.

METALS

Definitions

Drawn Metal. The process of drawing cold sheet or strip metal through a die by tension. It is possible to work a wider range of metals by this method than by extrusion. The metals used are also generally thinner than those used in the extrusion method.

Electro-Plating. The method of depositing metal or metal alloys for decorative or protective purposes on another metal by means of electric current. Metals which can be electrolytically deposited in this way are cadmium, chromium, copper, gold, nickel, silver, tin and zinc. Iron and steel are often protected from rusting in this way by zinc or cadmium.

Extruded Metal. The process of heating and forcing a non-ferrous metal, by pressure, through a die. An extremely wide range of shapes can be produced by this method.

Characteristics and Uses

ALUMINIUM

Aluminium is the lightest metal in normal use, having a specific gravity of 2.71. It has many uses in the hospital, among these are kitchen equipment and as kicking plates on doors, furniture fittings and in various sheet applications. The protective action of a spontaneously forming oxide on the surface of this metal renders it highly resistant to atmospheric corrosion particularly in indoor atmospheres. It is, however, attacked readily by some corrosives. The wrought alloys of aluminium need to be divided into two categories: (1) those which obtain their maximum mechanical properties by heat treatment; and (2) those which are not susceptible to heat treatment and which harden by working. A very wide range of alloys is used, many of which have been developed for specific purposes such as marine work and aircraft. Nickel, manganese, copper, silicon, magnesium and even chromium and titanium are all used to impart special qualities. Anodic oxidation increases its resistance to corrosion considerably, but provides a matt surface; this coating may be dyed any colour, on the other hand it can be either opaque or transparent.

It is obtainable in several forms: forged, sheet and plate and extruded. Forged aluminium can be used for door furniture and fasteners—also for casement stays.

Sheet and plate are the finished material from the process of hot and cold rolling from a cast ingot. This material can be used for roofing, duct systems, guttering, casings and panelling. Extruded sections are fine in texture, with uniform density and can be produced in almost any shape.

COPPER

This metal, owing to its resistance to corrosion, has an almost unlimited life. The familiar greyish green colour of copper roofs which is acquired by this metal on exposure to the weather is its own oxide protection. The bright metal although it may take some years to acquire this skin of oxide does not require any further protection from corrosion. Copper has an extremely wide range of applications. In sheet or strip form it can be used for roofing and parapet gutters. Other uses are: flashings, eaves, gutters, down pipes, damp proof courses, tanks, cylinders, lightning conductors and even as a facing to plywood. In tubing and pipe form it can be used for hot and cold water systems, radiators, panel and convection heating systems, ventilating pipes, and electrical purposes.

CORRUGATED IRON

Sheet lengths of corrugated iron vary from 4 feet to 12 feet, but the normal maximum length is generally 10 feet. The sheets are made a definite number of corrugations in width and in the heavier sheets vary from 3 to 5 inches per corrugation. The thickness is measured in Birmingham Wire Gauge and for better class work the thicker sheets 16 to 18 B.W.G. are used. For ordinary purposes 20-24 B.W.G. is adequate and the lightest 28 B.W.G. is only used for temporary purposes. The sheets need to be fixed to roofs by special hooked bolts. The normal overlap allowed is one corrugation for the sides and about six inches for the end lap.

STAINLESS STEEL

Stainless steel owes its stainless properties to the presence of chromium as an alloy, the greater the content of chromium the more resistant it is to corrosion. Surgical instruments are made from steel containing about 14 per cent. of chromium. This type of steel can be hardened to provide a perfectly satisfactory cutting edge. It can also be hardened and tempered to give the combination of toughness and spring required in other types of instruments. Bowls, beakers, jugs, cans, pans, sterilisers, tables, lockers, trolleys and operating tables are produced from a type of steel containing 18 per cent. of chromium and about 8 per cent. of nickel. This has been found very strong and highly-resistant to corrosives.

The resistance to corrosion of stainless steel is closely bound up with the properties of an invisible oxide film which grows spontaneously on the surface and can only be removed by chemical attack under conditions for which the use of stainless steel is not recommended.

Corrosive Reagents. Although stainless steel is safe to use with carbolic acid of any strength the manufacturers do not recommend it to be left in contact with hypochlorite solutions, particularly the acid type, for more than a few minutes at a time. Mercuric chloride solutions are other corrosive fluids and stainless steel is not recommended for use with them. Resistance to dilute iodine solutions is adequate under conditions of complete immersion, but if only partly immersed or if iodine drops are allowed to dry up, serious pitting may occur.

MICROFILM(See under Records)NOISE REDUCTION(See under Acoustic Treatment)NURSE CALL SYSTEMS(See under Internal Communications)NURSING STAFFING STANDARDS

This subject is dealt with in a report Nursing Staff, Considerations on Standards of Staffing published by King Edward's Hospital Fund for London in 1945: This report deals fully with the factors to be taken into account when assessing staff requirements both for hospitals of all types where the main considerations are space and size of wards, the size of the domestic staff and the reserve of nurses to replace those on leave or sick, and in addition the special factors to be considered in training schools.

Ratio of Nurses to Patients

A survey was made by the committee, whose findings were embodied in the report, of the number of staff actually engaged at the time per hundred beds (sisters, trained staff nurses and student nurses) in a 700, 600, 400, 200, 145 and 112 bed hospital respectively, all of which were training schools. From the figures obtained, the number of nurses needed in each case to work a 96 hour fortnight was calculated. The actual hours worked under existing arrangements which varied from 95 per fortnight to 132 per fortnight, was the basis for the calculation. The ratios obtained varied considerably from 65 nurses to 100 beds down to 48 per 100 beds. But it was considered that even at the hospitals with the highest ratios the numbers were insufficient to meet all requirements and the report suggested that a ratio of 70 ward nurses to 100 beds made up as follows might be considered by hospitals in the light of their individual requirements:—5 sisters, 5 trained staff nurses, 10 4th year student nurses, 50 1st to 3rd year student nurses.

Further information on this subject regarding its wider implications will be found in The Report of the Working Party on The Recruitment and Training of Nurses and also in The Minority Report of the Working Party.

OPERATING THEATRES—
EXPLOSION RISKS

There is always the possibility of fire or explosion during the time that anaesthetics are being administered owing to the formation of explosive mixtures, and this makes essential the taking of special precautions in the operating theatre.

Main Causes of Explosions

There are four main causes of explosions, (1) the use of hot wire such as cauteries, (2) sparks at the contacts of, or breaks in, electrical equipment, (3) sparks caused by frictional electricity and (4) the possibility of defective action of high-pressure gas equipment.

Explosive Anaesthetic Mixtures

Explosions of anaesthetic vapours, having an electrical origin might often have been prevented had the electrical conditions of such ignition been known. The proportions of ether-oxygen and air within which ignition is possible vary with the type of source. With hot wires, such as cauteries, ignition can occur within limits as wide as 3 to 80 per cent. of ether in oxygen. With sparks in general, however, the limits are much narrower. Second only to hot wires as a possible risk are the fizzling sparks at a slow intermittent break of circuit between fine wires. When the current is kept below certain well-defined values ignition can always be prevented. Ether mixtures are particularly sensitive to the rise of voltage at break of circuit. At tests carried out before the war, it was found that when keeping the mixture of ether constant at 14 per cent. the least direct current that caused ignition at 50 volts was 0.65 amp., at 40 volts this rose to 2.75 amp., and at 30 volts ignition could only be obtained by currents well above 10 amp. The advantage of using low voltage apparatus can scarcely be exaggerated though clean breaks are not a likely source of ignition.

Conclusions Drawn from Experiments

(1) Cauteries or heated metals are highly dangerous when in contact with ether-oxygen or ether-air mixtures. Ether is too inflammable to be used in any proportions where there are possibilities of such ignition.

(2) The temperature of an inspection flash lamp bulb is far below danger limits.

(3) A local hot spot in the leads due to a broken wire, or a bad connection at lamp terminals, might be sufficient to cause ignition if they reach the critical temperature.

(4) Ignition by a.c. break sparks between fuse wires—or by broken wires—is always easier than by d.c. probably because of inductance. With a.c. there is no lower limit of voltage at which the risk of ignition is negligible.

(5) The use of small a.c. inspection lamps should be discouraged.

Buffer Resistances Required

The results of work on ignition sparks showed that the inherent or buffer resistances of the circuit and battery should be at least twice the limiting resistance shown in the following table:

R.M.S. voltage	Least igniting current, amperes.	Circuit resistance, ohms.	Ratio, d.c./a.c.
2	over 4.6	0	8
4	3.0	1.33	5.0
6	1.75	3.25	8.0
8	1.17	6.66	11.3
10	0.80	12.5	15.0

Further Precautions

To eliminate the risk of contact sparks all switches installed in the operating theatre should be of the sparkless type, consisting of a sealed contact tube containing mercury, operated by a semi-rotary movement. Otherwise gas-tight housings should be used. Three pin interlocking type plugs, which prevent the withdrawal of the plug if the circuit is closed, should be used, and the switch controlling the outlet should also be of the sparkless type. All electric motors and control gear for fans, etc., should be placed outside the anaesthetic zone, but if voltage regulators are required in the theatre they should be pre-set and totally enclosed and flame proof, as should all other electrical equipment which needs to be in the theatre.

Static Electricity

With regard to static electricity resulting from friction, this depends on the atmospheric conditions prevailing in the theatre, and although in this country the humidity of the atmosphere is generally sufficient to prevent the heavy build up of static, precautions should be taken.

Electrification of a frictional character can often be generated by the movement of dry fabrics such as the removal of a blanket from a patient or trolley and may result in dangerous electrification of equipment sufficient to produce a spark capable of igniting anaesthetic vapours. The risk becomes very small if the humidity is as high as 65 per cent. A warm blanket from a hot cupboard, however, may require a long time to attain hygrometric equilibrium with the surrounding atmosphere.

Trolleys and other equipment do not hold their charge long in a humid atmosphere, but any tendency for the air to become dangerously dry can be checked by reference to a wet and dry bulb thermometer and, if necessary, danger averted by air-conditioning.

All metal trolleys, stands, and so on, which are on metal insulated feet should be earthed at all times with brass or copper trailing chains screwed to the trolleys at two points. If the operating theatre is fitted with rubber flooring this should be of the conducting type. Trolley tyres should be of the same material.

PAINT AND PAINTING

Specifications

For the preservation of buildings regular painting is an essential. The importance of preparing proper specifications for work to be done needs to be emphasised. In new buildings the architect is responsible for paint specifications, but for later work and preservation different specifications will be necessary. This is because if the original work was not well done or too long a period has elapsed since re-painting, stripping will be necessary. If the paint work, however, was done well, rubbing down and stopping will take the place of stripping. If a different type of paint is used from the first time some modification in specification will anyway be necessary.

With regard to the specifying of paints in Post War Building Study, No. 5, which deals exhaustively with the whole subject of the painting of buildings, it is suggested that the framing of specifications is a difficult matter. After stressing that skill in preparation of the surface is as vital to good performance as the quality of paint used, the survey suggests the following alternative methods of specification as most likely to give satisfaction :

(1) Supply a list of not less than three proprietary brands of paint, known by experience or repute to be of the type required for the purpose. Paint should then be selected from this list and used in accordance with the manufacturers' directions. This places reliance on the reputation of the manufacturer—and every reliable firm regards its reputation as one of its most valuable assets.

(2) The purpose for which the paint is to be used should be specified. The paint must also be of the type recommended in P.W.B.S., No. 5, as suitable for that purpose, and that it shall be of ingredients which conform to the British Standards.

It is also suggested that once specifications have been adopted painters should be required to work to them and an inspection clause and examination of material clause should be included in the specification.

Purpose of Paint

Dependant on its correct application to the surface it is designed to protect, a suitable paint creates a durable film which is proof against atmospheric attack and other wear for some time. On interior surfaces paint should have satisfactory light reflection value. (See Artificial Lighting for reflection values of various surfaces.)

The most generally used paint is oil paint. Varnish has been in use for centuries and in recent years scientific research has made available several other varieties. The types available are oil paints, synthetic paints, varnishes, cellulose finishes and water paints.

Oil Paint

Oil paints are composed of a mixture of dry pigments ground in a medium of oil and sometimes varnish, and thinned to a suitable consistency with turpentine or mineral spirits. Pigments may consist of a wide range of substances including white lead, zinc oxide, titanium oxide, lead chromate, ultramarine or Prussian blue. These must not fade or change under exposure. Linseed oil is the most commonly used drying oil although Tung oil, also known as China wood oil, is another important oil used mainly for the preparation of hard gloss paints. Thinners, turpentine and in more recent years white spirit, are added to reduce the viscous consistency of the drying oil and make the paint easy to apply. As the paint would take three to four days to dry if made with linseed oil alone, small quantities of "driers" are added. These are compounds containing lead or cobalt and terebine which speed up the drying and make it possible to touch the paint within a few hours of application without disturbing the surface.

Flat finish paints can be obtained by adding turpentine or mineral spirits and reducing the proportion of linseed oil. The addition of varnish in the right proportion with the pigment will produce enamel, which also contains heat treated or boiled oil to make it spread better and give a finer finish and eliminate brush marks. Egg shell finish is a medium glaze between matt and glossy.

Synthetic Paints

Whereas natural oils or gums are uncontrolled products as regards actual quality, synthetic oils and gums can be standardised in manufacture and repeated with accuracy. These synthetic substances should not be taken as mere substitutes for the older varnishes but are claimed to provide rapid drying, long durability and high gloss. It should be added, however, that with the introduction of glyptal resins and other synthetic refinements paints can no longer be freely mixed, and nothing should be added to a synthetic paint except in accordance with the manufacturers instructions.

Where protection as opposed to appearance is the main requisite, the older types of paint are advantageous. For purely decorative purposes, however, synthetic paints may prove more satisfactory.

Varnishes

Varnishes are transparent and used to enhance the surface of a work. They differ from paint in containing no pigment or extenders. Natural resin is used in making varnish, it is melted and fused at a certain temperature and "cooked" with linseed oil. Driers are added with turpentine or white spirit. Synthetic resins have been introduced but these differ materially from the natural and have resulted in the production of new varnishes. With regard to finishes, the higher the proportion of linseed oil the more elastic and durable the varnish is, but the longer it takes to dry. A high resin content however gives a harder and more brilliant surface but is less durable and elastic.

Cellulose Paints

These paints differ from oil paints by virtue of drying entirely by the evaporation of a solvent, no chemical change is involved. The basic ingredient of cellulose varnishes is nitrocellulose, a substance made from cotton. This is dissolved in a suitable solvent, together with plasticisers to give the required flexibility, and resins for hardness and adhesion. Cellulose enamel can be produced by the addition of pigment. The fact that drying is entirely due to evaporation of the solvent means that the film of paint retains its solubility and difficulties are experienced in its application unless it is sprayed. In practice cellulose paints are rarely used in buildings except for the decoration of prefabricated fittings.

Water Paints

These paints have been extensively developed during the war period and are of use both for interior wall work and the decoration of exterior stucco and concrete. These types of paint usually dry partially or wholly by the evaporation of water. The vehicle portion is usually casein, egg-white or glue. This type of paint was originally called distemper because the pigments were tempered or mixed with size—a water soluble vehicle.

Wood Preservatives

Creosote type preparations are the most generally used and are often employed as stains for new woodwork. N.B.—The use of creosote should be avoided on any surface which may subsequently have to be painted as it contains substances soluble in the medium of paint and will bleed through it and cause discoloration.

Frequency of Painting

According to a generally accepted estimate made a few years ago the cost of painting with a medium priced paint was made up of 4 units of cost for labour to one unit of cost for paint. Working on this basis with the present higher relative cost of labour nothing is to be saved by using cheap paint, for the longer a paint lasts the more the hospital will save.

Wards and other inside surfaces which are not subject to mechanical wear should not need repainting for seven years or more. The smoothness of the final surface is of importance, as when the walls are washed down any small protuberances will eventually be broken down and wear will start.

For exterior work lead paint is generally recommended and repainting will be required every six years. Exposed portions may have to be done more frequently. Synthetic paints should, however, be considered, particularly if favourable evidence can be obtained of their use in conditions similar to those in which they are required.

If the original coat is burnt off a wooden surface, the job must be treated with a suitable primer. Where the surface is already painted, two undercoats and one finishing coat will usually be sufficient.

Preparation of Surface

The preparation of surfaces before painting should be carried out with care. Smoothness is essential if a well-finished and hard-wearing result is to be obtained.

On woodwork all accumulated dirt should first be removed. Dampness is frequently a cause of trouble and woodwork should be allowed to dry out well if blistering is to be avoided. Any mould growths, which often appear on woodwork which has been allowed to get damp, should be carefully cleaned off and the wood sterilised. All holes must be made good with hard stopping. The use of glazier's putty is bad practice. Treatment of old paint surfaces depends on the state they are in. If they are bad they must be burnt off, or paint remover, made with powerful non-corrosive solvents, should be used. On surfaces which have disintegrated uniformly from the surface by "chalking" and which are free from cracking and peeling, rubbing down will provide a good surface for repainting. Wet rubbing is recommended with water proof sandpaper. Ministry of Labour regulations forbid dry rubbing down of lead paints.

On metal the chief difficulty is rust. It is essential that every trace of rust be removed before any paint is put on a metal surface for if this is not done oxidation will continue underneath the paint. If the general paint surface is in fair condition it should be looked over and any defects should be scraped down to the bright metal. It can then be repainted. If it is a bad surface complete stripping is essential.

With plaster surfaces and water painting dampness is once again, as with wood, the major trouble. In old buildings the walls will often be found to vary in porosity. If this is the case they should first be treated with a coat of priming liquid or other sealer for otherwise flaking is likely to ensue.

Cracking and Scaling

A paint surface is always under tension through expansion and contraction due to exposure to changes in temperature. In consequence the paint needs to be elastic in order for the various coats to expand and contract equally with the material to which they adhere. If this is not so or if paint is on wood which has shrunk, cracking will occur and may lead to peeling. Thin paint films are less likely to crack than thick, as may occur when a surface has been repainted several times without wearing down. Hard inelastic undercoats should be avoided. If cracking recurs after repainting the only solution is to strip the surface completely instead of rubbing down.

Dampness

Dampness, as mentioned above, is the cause of blistering and flaking of paint. It is absolutely essential to let woodwork dry out before painting, for if blistering occurs the only remedy is stripping and repainting. Outside work should not be started too early in the morning as dew or mist may have left a layer of moisture on the surface to be painted.

Paint Economy

The economy recommendations on the use of paint in building, construction and maintenance issued in January, 1949, by the Ministry of Works to replace the former more severe economies set out in the Interim Economy Memorandum issued in September, 1946, have now also been withdrawn.

The recommendations however are printed below as they are of continuing interest in pointing out where certain economies can be made in painting expenditure.

"1. Paints containing linseed oil should not be used in maintenance work for repainting surfaces which, by cleaning or other reasonable treatment, can be restored to a condition appropriate to the purpose for which the room or building is about to be used.

2. Paints, or other treatments containing linseed oil should not be used on exterior surfaces, previously unpainted, of stone, brick, clay-block, concrete cement rendering or stucco.

3. Paints, or other treatments containing linseed oil, should not be used when re-painting surfaces previously treated with cement paints, silicate paints, bituminous paints or wood preservatives.

4. Bituminous or tar paints should be used wherever practicable on exterior iron and steel such as gates, railings, outbuildings, etc.

5. Wood preservatives, in place of paint, should be used wherever practicable on exterior woodwork such as weatherboards, bargeboards, gutterboards, outbuildings, etc.

6. Encouragement should be given to the use of stain and varnish, in place of paint, wherever practicable on interior woodwork such as doors, cupboards, architraves, picture rails, skirtings and staircases.

7. Cement paints or silicate paints should be used where suitable, according to the type and purpose of the building, on interior surfaces of brick, concrete, cement rendering, asbestos-cement, lime plaster and insulating board."

British Standards

British Standards exist for paint material, i.e. drying oils, thinners, driers, pigments and extenders, colours of paints, oil paints and varnishes.

(For suppliers of these materials see under appropriate head in the Subject Index of the Guide to Hospital Purchasing, p. 1149.)

PLASTICS

Definition

The term plastics is applied to a widely differing range of products manufactured from synthetic resins, which are produced from either simple organic compounds (acetylene, formalin, etc.) or by chemically modifying organic materials such as cellulose from wood and cotton, and casein from milk which occur in nature. These products vary in properties from sticky syrups to brittle, tough or fibrous solids.

In most cases plastics are not cheap materials but the hospital administrator would do well to consider their specialised qualities when planning new layouts or expenditure on replacement of more conventional equipment.

Although there are many applications where the initial expenditure may be doubled or trebled if plastics are used it must be borne in mind that plastics may last ten times as long as other types of material.

Types of Plastics

Laminated Plastics (Constructional Materials). Constructional materials for partitions, wall surfaces, table surfaces, furniture, trolleys and so on are generally made from laminations. Laminated plastics are made by sticking together under great pressure large numbers of thin sections of material with a synthetic resin bonding agent, which process can be likened to the manufacture of plywood. The constituent layers are often only a few thousandths of an inch thick. The most widely employed materials include paper, any form of cloth or fabric, glass cloth and wood veneers. Safety glass where the glass is laminated with bonding materials also falls into this category.

Properties. These products have the following qualities: in general they are strong and light, possess good chemical resistance, are unaffected by weather and will withstand extreme changes in climatic conditions. They are unaffected by bacteria, fungi and insects, and may be obtained with highly polished and scratch-resisting surfaces with a wide range of colour and design. In addition they are good insulating material and are fire-resisting. They can, in most cases, be worked easily with wood and metal working tools. Water is used as a lubricant.

Some Types of Product. Two products of interest are impregnated plywood and densified wood. The first has a lower water absorption, is more resistant to insect attack and is less inflammable than ordinary plywood. The second, made from impregnated wood veneers, produces a material with a higher specific gravity and increased tensile strength. This material is said to have strength approximating to metals while still only having specific gravity one-sixth that of iron.

One kind of laminated plastic panel is marketed in a standard size of 8 ft. \times 4 ft. \times 1 in. consisting of a series of double "T" girders with webs at approximately 2 inch centres separated by rectangular cavities running the entire length of the panel. The cavities can, if necessary, be filled with sound-proofing materials. It lends itself well to the construction of wall partitions.

Another type is marketed in panels 9 ft. \times 4 ft. \times $\frac{1}{8}$ in. and is a good facing material for walls or horizontal surfaces.

Cheaper products for use as partitions are made from sawdust or wood wool bonded with a synthetic resin adhesive and faced with paper, wood veneer or metal foil.

Expanded Plastics. Plastic materials produced by special techniques in the form of solidified foams consisting of a large number of bubbles held together by a little plastic are known as expanded plastics. Owing to their low specific gravity and low thermal conductivity they are used for thermal insulation.

Synthetic Adhesives. A result of intensive research has been the production of specialised adhesives for bonding almost any material. Adhesives are now available which produce a joint with aluminium which is stronger than that produced by riveting. Special adhesives are available for bonding metals, wood, glass, leather, rubber, fabrics and many other materials.

Moulded Plastics. An extremely wide variety of moulded plastics are in use in the kitchen and for plumbing and sanitation. Plastic wash basins, lavatory basins and seats which are light in weight, unbreakable and do not stain, are being more widely applied.

Extruded Plastics. Among this type of product are pipes manufactured from extruded phenolic plastics which have been used both in America and this country for plumbing purposes. They are claimed to be easier to install and repair than lead or copper and as they possess certain elastic qualities may prove more resistant to bursting when frozen in winter.

Applications in the Hospital

Walls. There are many types of plastic materials used, varying from the cheaper resin bonded sawdust board suitable for indoor partitions to resin bonded plywood, attractive laminates employing beautiful veneers or other coloured materials as a decorative surface, also cellular and expanded plastics for sound and heat insulation. As the surface of these laminates is easy to clean, capable of chemical sterilisation, hard wearing and highly scratch-resisting they would appear ideal material for hospital corridors, wards, bathrooms and lavatories.

Roofing. Laminated structures can be used for roofing if provision is made for adequate ventilation. Roof lighting can be provided by transparent acrylic sheeting which is claimed to have the advantages over wired glass, apart from being unbreakable, of being easily fitted since the sheet can be drilled and bolted and no frames are needed and also it has a higher light transmission factor.

Flooring. Laminates can be used as flooring materials for bathrooms and lavatories, with the advantage of easy cleaning.

Ventilation. Plastic ducting is available for ventilation and fume extraction.

Sanitation. Wash basins, lavatory basins and seats are now available which wear well, are attractive in appearance as well as being non-corrodible. They can easily be cleaned with detergents (abrasive should not be used). Pipes for plumbing purposes are also obtainable as mentioned above.

Electrical. There has been very extensive use of plastics in this field for wall switches, plugs, lamp fittings, fuse boxes, control panels, etc. The majority of cables are now said to be insulated with plastic in place of rubber as it has the advantage of not perishing with time.

Kitchen. Hygiene and ease of cleaning can be facilitated by the use of laminated wall board, plastic flooring and plastic scoops, measures and crockery.

Fabrics. There are now many kinds of fabric available of all weights from heavy duty materials suitable for upholstery to the finer nylons and similar materials.

Paints and Lacquers. Special paints and lacquers are available which produce tough, corrosion-resisting surfaces suitable for walls, floors and furniture.

RECORDS

Indices and Filing Systems

Hospitals, whatever their size or type, are required to identify and produce patients' records in some or all of the following ways:—

- (1) By name.
- (2) By number.
- (3) By disease.
- (4) By consultant or service.

These requirements may be accomplished by maintaining the following indices and filing systems.

(a) Master alphabetical perpetual name index. This "name" index usually consists of small vertically filed cards, carrying the minimum amount of information needed to identify the patient. Full name, address, age, sex, date of reference, and unit number are regarded as essential; other details may be added if required. It is advisable to keep this master index card simple, and to leave it as static as possible in the files. Frequent withdrawal adds to the possible margin of error in refiling. Alphabetical guide cards, broken down as required, are inserted. Provided that the full name of the patient is obtained, the cards correctly filed and centralised, rapid identification is ensured. It is inadvisable to use this card for purposes other than identification.

(b) Filing of records by unit number. The system of filing patients' records by unit number is based on the conception that the patient is a "unit", and all information concerning him should be available at each and every examination. A number is assigned to him on his first contact with the hospital, and is added to every document used throughout his hospital life, the documents being assembled in one folder, regardless of the number of readmissions, or the number of consultants seen. In practice it becomes "one patient, one number, one folder", and the folders are filed numerically. Experience has proved that it is possible to use numbers up to 999,999 without undue strain on the filing staff's efficiency.

(c) Filing by disease. This is achieved by coding the final diagnoses according to a pre-determined classification, and entering the unit numbers of the coded records on to "Diagnostic Index" cards, which are headed with the disease and the appropriate code number, and filed in code number sequence. The classification recommended by the Ministry of Health is the "International Statistical Classification of Diseases, Injuries and Causes of Death", Vols. I and II, published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, by arrangement with the World Health Organisation, Geneva.

(d) Consultant or Service Index. This index may be maintained on separate cards for each consultant or service, adding the patients' unit numbers, or the index may be combined with the Disease Index, one card serving two purposes.

Punched Card Systems

Additional information may be added to the cards used for (c) and (d), dependent on the individual hospital requirements, and also dependent on whether the cards are manually or mechanically sorted. The installation of punched card equipment is essential for the recording and analysing of mass detail, but it is doubtful whether any single hospital has sufficient clinical and administrative material requiring to be analysed to justify the expense of an installation for its sole use.

Centralisation of Indices and Records

Rapid identification of the patient cannot be achieved unless the master alphabetical index is centralised and the assigning of the unit number accurately done. Lack of space frequently militates against physical centralisation of the clinical records. If these cannot be housed in one place, a note of their disposition should be made on the master index cards. Steel cabinets are recommended for current records, as they provide ease of access with little physical effort. Racks are more economical in space and cost for older records.

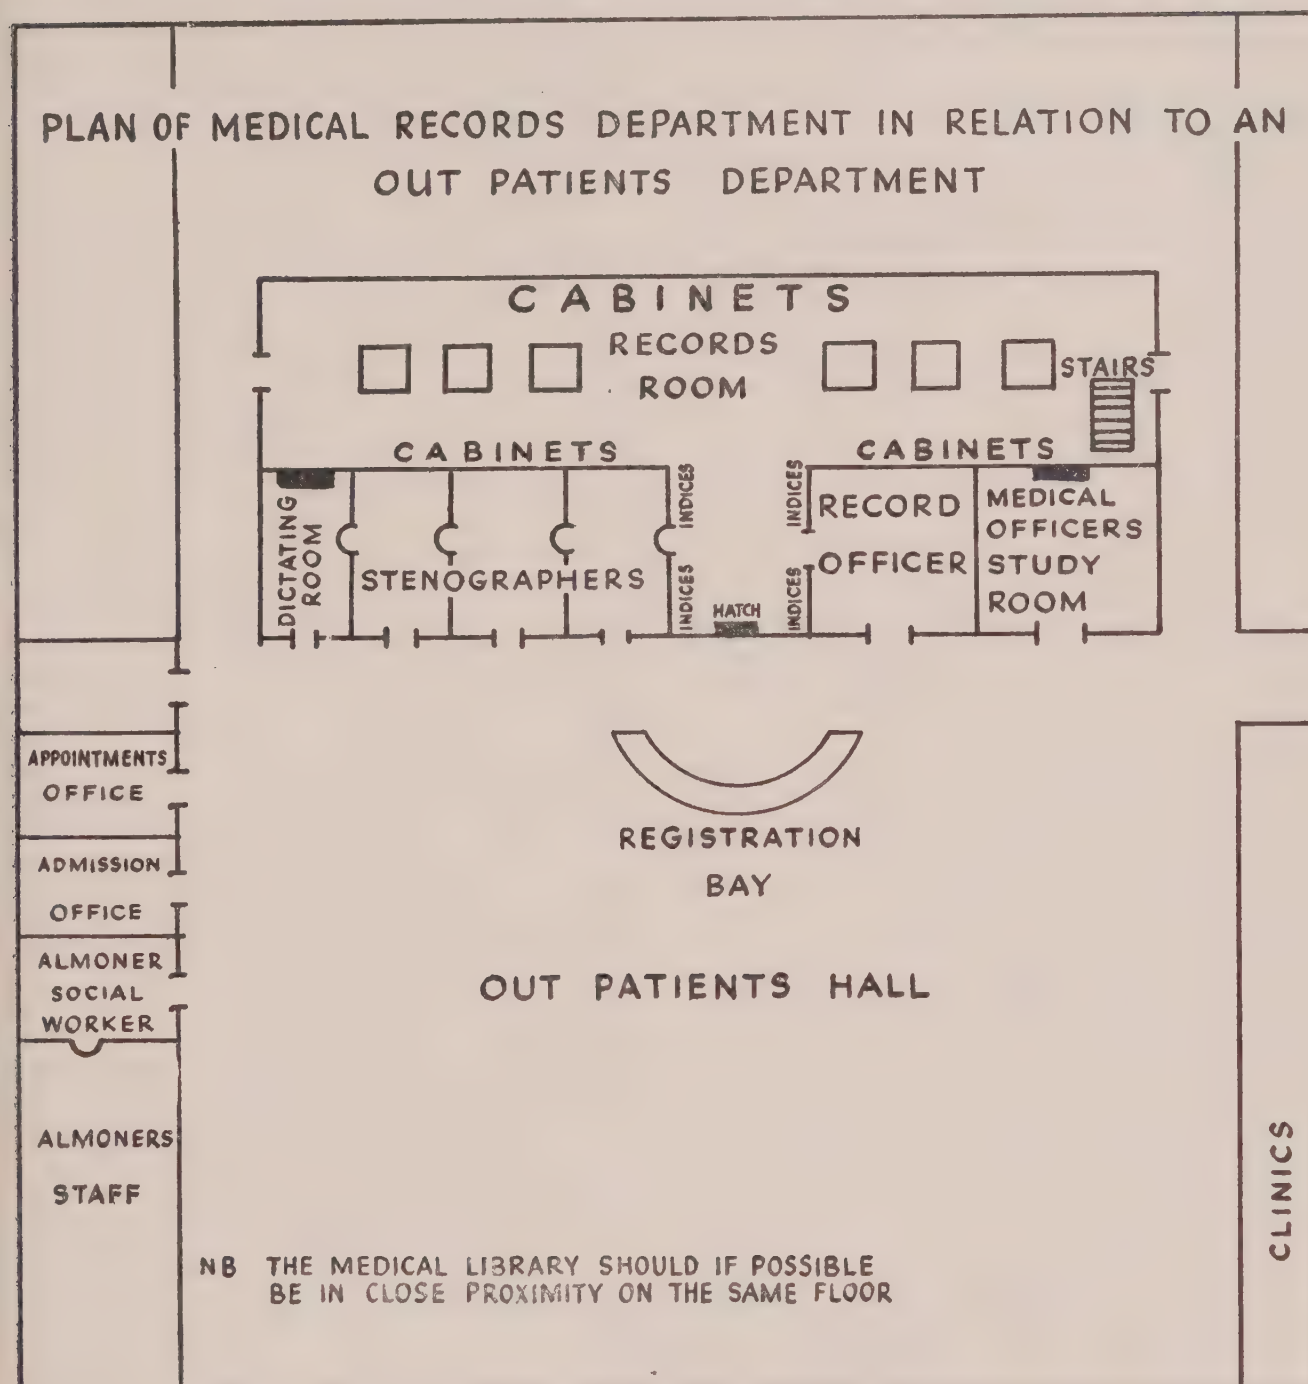

Uniformity in Records

Uniformity in design of clinical record sheets is to be discouraged. Records should be made to fit the patient, not the patient fitted to the record. Uniformity in the size of records documents is strongly recommended. Quarto size for documents and folders is more economical in use of paper and consumption of space.

Preservation of Records

No directives have so far been given in regard to the period of retention of medical records. Each hospital makes its own decision, which is affected by the amount of space available for storage purposes. It is probable that micro-filming will provide a satisfactory and economical solution to the problem of record preservation in minimum of space. Until such facilities are generally available, hospitals are advised to pay attention to the size, thickness and amount of paper used in the production of their records, with a view to making the best use of available space.

LAYOUT OF MEDICAL RECORDS DEPARTMENT

The above diagram is reprinted from an article by Elsie Royle—Medical Records Department Principles of Organisation which was published in THE HOSPITAL, April 1948, page 158.)

Considerations in Planning Medical Records Department

(See plan of medical records department in relation to an out-patients department given above.)

When planning a Medical Records Department the main essentials to consider are:—

1. Long walls for cabinets.
2. Light.
3. Basement storage room (see stairs on plan).
4. Closed room—issue and receipt of records through hatch (marked on plan).
5. Proximity to Out-Patient Hall and Registration Bay.
6. Small offices for stenographers to minimise noise and interruption. These offices should have access to Out-patient Hall through doors, but internal communication through archways or swing doors.

7. Large tables for sorting and assembling records.
8. Uniform filing cabinets and furniture.
9. Hollerith or Powers-Samas installations should not be housed near patients or staff on account of the noise. It is inadvisable for them to be placed in the Records Department itself.

REFRIGERATORS

There are few hospitals which need the large commercial type of refrigerator used for bulk storage and in most cases completely automatic plant is satisfactory for normal requirements.

Types, and Refrigerants

Commercial Plants. The refrigerants generally in use in large commercial plants are ammonia and carbon dioxide. As the former suffers from the disadvantage of unpleasant smell from the gas should there be a break, and further because ammonia attacks copper and other non-ferrous metals, it is seldom used in hospitals. As there are difficulties with automatic plant using carbon dioxide this is not often used either.

Automatic Refrigerators. The principal refrigerants used in automatic refrigerators are sulphur dioxide, methyl chloride and a substance known as "Freon 12". Although sulphur dioxide plants have been in wide use and were simple in operation improvements have been effected by the use of methyl chloride. In consequence the last named refrigerant is the most frequently used in hospital automatic plants whether for cold rooms up to 1,000 cu. ft. capacity or for the ward refrigerators of perhaps only 3 or 4 cu. ft.

The compressor type is worked by a mechanical compressor which circulates the refrigerant thereby abstracting heat from the contents of the refrigerator and its surroundings. These generally employ an electric motor to drive the compressor; air-cooled plants are normally satisfactory.

The absorption type has no moving parts and is operated by heat provided by electricity, gas or oil and also needs water cooling. This type has the advantage of silent working.

Sizes. There are no British Standards so far for the larger sizes of refrigerator suitable for hospitals, but Post War Building Study No. 9 gives the external dimensions of a 15 cu. ft. storage capacity refrigerator as 3' x 2' x 5' 3" and for 250 cu. ft. storage capacity 7' 4" x 6' 10" x 7' 6". Sectional cold rooms suitable for meat or milk storage are available up to 500 cu. ft. capacity.

British standard B.S. 922:1940 specifying performance and construction and overall dimensions, and B.S. 1183:1944 are for domestic sizes, but the larger models may be suitable for ward kitchens.

Position of Refrigerators and Cold Rooms

When installing a cold room or self-contained machine it is important to see that the proposed position is suitable from the point of view of the surrounding atmospheric temperature. If this should be higher than the makers stipulate the effectiveness of the plant will be reduced.

Insulation

Probably the most effective insulating material in use is slab cork generally four inches thick. This needs protection against mechanical damage. If the cold room is built as a separate unit tongued and grooved boarding is generally employed for the exterior. If used for the storage of bodies for post mortems the normal design can be followed and some type of automatic refrigeration used to obtain the desired temperature.

Storage Space Requirements

Generally a cold room capacity at the rate of about 2 cu. ft. should be allowed per patient. This is only a rough guide. Other figures which have been suggested by various authorities for restaurant or canteen purposes are 0.50 cu. ft. minimum refrigerator storage capacity for 100-250 persons. For restaurants of 500-1,000 seats this figure drops to 0.37 cu. ft. Another method suggested is to allow 0.50 cu. ft. of storage space per main meal served. A separate special machine for fish storage is a useful piece of refrigerator equipment. If ice is required on a large scale a separate ice making plant will be needed.

Solid Carbon Dioxide

There is one further refrigerant which needs to be mentioned, solid carbon dioxide. This product resembles hard compressed snow and evaporates slowly without melting, one of the advantages being that no residue is left after evaporation. It has a temperature of -110°F . and is consequently much colder than ice. It has a high refrigerating effect. The storage of commodities at low temperature in specially designed conservators is claimed to be comparatively simple with solid carbon dioxide. These conservators are mobile and independent of external power supply, but it is essential to ensure that they are designed to maintain an even temperature and to prevent excessive local cooling. Adequate insulation and the avoidance of contacting metal parts are essential to ensure a minimum consumption of the refrigerant. Solid carbon dioxide is obtainable in the form of blocks of nominal 25 lbs. weight either of square or circular cross section.

STAIN REMOVAL CHART

Compiled by the Product Research Department, Thomas Hedley & Co., Ltd., Newcastle-on-Tyne

Type of Stain	Whether usually removed by white work formula	Special Treatments	Fabrics on which they can be used
Albumen	Yes, if temperature of first wash is not raised above 120°F.	Dampen with 1% solution of malt extract (or pepsin acidified with a few drops of dilute hydrochloric acid) and leave for $\frac{1}{2}$ to 1 hour. The stain must be kept moist for the entire period. A cover prevents rapid drying.	For all fabrics.
Ammonia	Yes.	—	—
Animal	Yes, if bleaching is practised.	Use oxidising bleach.	(See Oxidising Bleaches, p. 962.)
Asphalt.. ..	Partially.	(1) Work into stain a mixture of 75% solvent soap and 25% chloroform. (2) Spot with a mixture of 50% red oil and 50% petrol. Allow to set—after half-an-hour wash in 2% soda ash solution at 180°F. (3) Apply specially manufactured spotting re-agent.	(1) For all fabrics, except acetate rayon. (2) White cotton or linen only. (3) Some are unsuitable for acetate rayon..
Balsam of Peru ..	It is insoluble in water.	Soak in 50 : 50 acetone : xylol mixture.	For all fabrics, except acetate rayon.
Beer	Yes, if bleaching is practised.	Use an oxidising bleach.	(See Oxidising Bleaches, p. 962.)
Blood	Yes, if temperature of first wash is not raised above 120°F.	(1) Use an oxidising bleach. (2) For old obstinate stains use a Cream Suds boil.	(1) See Oxidising Bleaches, p. 962. (2) For cotton and linen only ; see Cream Suds boil.
Blue, Aniline	Yes.	If a rinse is not effective use oxidising bleach.	(See Oxidising Bleaches, p. 962.)
„ Prussian ultramarine.	Yes.	If a rinse is not effective soak in a 5% acetic acid solution for 30 minutes.	Cotton, linen and rayon only.
Chocolate	Yes, if bleaching is practised.	Use an oxidising bleach.	(See Oxidising Bleach, p. 962.)
Chromic acid (up to 4%)	Up to 2% Chromic acid will wash out.	Stronger solutions produce stains which should be soaked in a warm soap solution for 30 minutes then treated with a 5% solution of sodium hydro-sulphite.	For all fabrics.
Cocoa	Yes, if bleaching is practised.	Use an oxidising bleach.	(See Oxidising Bleach, p. 962.)
Cod Liver Oil ..	Partially.	(1) Soak for $\frac{1}{2}$ hour in a 50 : 50 mixture of red oil and petrol then boil in a 2% solution of soda ash. (2) Use solvents (p. 961).	(1) White cotton and linen. (2) All fabrics.
Coffee	Yes, if bleaching is practised.	Use an oxidising bleach.	(See Oxidising Bleach, p. 962.)
Copper	No.	Spot with mixture of 1 part hydrofluoric acid to 4 parts water.	For all fabrics, except weighted silk.
Cream	Yes.	Treat as cod liver oil if stain is stubborn.	—
Colour stains	(See unidentified stains	(p. 961.)	—
Egg	Yes, if temperature of first wash does not rise above 120°.	—	—
Fruit	In some cases.	Use an oxidising bleach.	(See Oxidising Bleach, p. 962.)
Grass	No.	Use an oxidising bleach. Spot with a mixture of 1 part glacial acetic acid to 3 parts methylated spirit.	(See Oxidising Bleach, p. 962.) For all fabrics, except acetate rayon.

Grease	Partially	See asphalt	—
Glue	In some cases	Soak in a cold alkaline solution	For all fabrics except acetate rayon.
Gums	In some cases	See glue.	—
Icecream	Yes.	Use 1% solution of pepsin or malt extract as for albumen.	For all fabrics.
Ink, writing	Not entirely	Extract with hot glycerine to remove tannin and follow with 2% oxalic acid solution to remove iron, or if an aniline die base use permanganate-oxalic treatment	For all white fabrics.
Ink, copying ..	No	(1) Spot with a 1% solution of hydrochloric acid or acetic acid. (2) Immerse in a 3-4 volumes hydrogen peroxide to which a little dilute ammonium hydroxide has been added.	(1) and (2) For all fabrics.
Ink, marking (silver)..	No	Apply tincture of iodine : after 2 minutes add 5% solution of sodium thiosulphate to which a crystal or two of sodium sulphite has been added.	For all fabrics.
Iron	No	Soak in a hot 2% solution of oxalic acid or 5% solution of ammonium acid fluoride solution. Spot with 1 part of commercial hydrofluoric acid to 4 parts water.	For cotton, linen and rayon. For all fabrics except weighted silk.
Iodine	No	Soak stained portion in a 5% soln. of sodium thiosulphate.	For all white fabrics.
Lipstick	No	(1) Boil in 3% Cream Suds. Iron based lipsticks require added treatment of iron stain. (2) Solvent (p. 950) followed by oxidising bleach. (3) Solvent followed by reducing bleach. (4) Solvent followed by a soak in a lukewarm 2% solution of Glauber salts. (5) Solvent followed by an oxidising bleach.	(1), (2) and (3) For white cotton and linen. (4) and (5) For woollens and silks ; see Oxidising Bleaches (p. 962).
Lubricating oil ..	No	As for cod liver oil	—
Medicine unknown ..		See unknown stain (p. 961).	—
Mildew	Yes, if bleaching is practised.	Oxidising bleach. Spot with 80% acetic acid.	See Oxidising Bleaches (p. 962). All fabrics except rayon.
Mud	Partially	(1) Brush off as much mud as possible when dry before washing. Very resistant stains are removed in Cream Suds boil. (2) Apply a 50 : 50 mixture of oleic acid and trichloroethylene for 10 mins. before adding the article to the boil of a white work process. (3) Wash with spirit soap.	(1) and (2) For cotton, rayon and linen only. (3) For all fabrics.
Mustard	Yes	—	—
Paint	No	(1) Spot with a mixture of 2 parts meth. spirits, 1 part acetone, 1 part benzol, or equal parts of amyl alcohol and carbon tetrachloride ; turpentine can be used as a solvent. (2) For all large stains soak in 2% solution of sodium silicate.	(1) For all fabrics except acetate rayon. (2) For all fabrics. Linen and cotton may be boiled.

Type of Stain	Whether usually removed by white work formula	Special Treatments	Fabrics on which they can be used
Perspiration	Cotton, linen and rayon Yes.	Soak affected part in lukewarm 5-10 vol. hydrogen-peroxide with a little dilute ammonia added for a period up to 15 mins.	For silks and woollens.
Rubber cement ..	No	Solvent (see below)	For all fabrics.
Rust	No.	See iron.
Scorch	No	(1) Allow a solution of 5 vol. hydrogen-peroxide to dry into the affected parts. (2) Bleach with sodium hypochlorite.	(1) For all fabrics. (2) For cotton, linen and rayon.
Shoe polish	Partially	(1) Boil in Cream Suds. (2) Oxidising bleach. (3) Soak in a hot 5% solution of sodium hydrosulphite.	(1) For cotton and linen, only. (2) See Oxidising Bleach (p. 962). (3) All white fabrics.
Silver nitrate	No	Apply tincture of iodine; after 2 minutes add 5% solution of sodium thiosulphate to which a crystal or two of sodium sulphite has been added. Rewash.	For all fabrics.
Sulphur	Washes off cotton and linen.	Removed by solvents—white spirit or carbon disulphide.	Only necessary on silks and woollens.
Tar	Partially.	See asphalt.
Tannin	No	Use oxidising bleach followed by a hot solution of 5% sodium hydrosulphite, and soak in hot glycerine. Rewash.	See Oxidising Bleach (p. 962) for cotton and linen, and rayon.
Tea	Yes, if bleaching is practised.	Use oxidising bleach.	See Oxidising Bleach (p. 962)
Tobacco	Yes, if bleaching is practised.	Use oxidising bleach.	See Oxidising Bleach (p. 962).
Vaseline	Yes	Solvent treatment if stain is resistant.	See solvents (below).
Wax	Yes	Spot with carbon tetrachloride	All except acetate rayon.
Yellow stains (a) caused by insufficient rinsing. (b) yellow centres of sheets, pillowcases, shirt collars and cuffs	Yes No.	Usually rinsing is sufficient. Soak in a 50 : 50 mixture of oleic acid and trichlorethylene for 10 minutes then add to a washing machine during the boil of a load of white work.	All fabrics. Cotton, linen and rayon.
Yellow staining in wool	No.	(1) Soak in a cold 1% solution of hydrochloric acid for half an hour. (2) Soak in a 2 vol. hydrogen-peroxide for up to 12 hours	(1) and (2) Wool only.

Notes on Some of the Treatments Mentioned Above

The Cream Suds Boil is a simple, inexpensive, yet effective method for removing stains. While not all stains yield to this process it is surprising how many fabrics can be restored to use by it. It can be performed in an uncovered tank fitted with an open steam pipe, or in a small boiler. Fill the tank about half full, stir in Cream Suds (4 oz. per gallon) and bring to the boil. Since the linen or cotton being treated must be under the surface of the solution, it is most important not to overload the tank.

All surface dirt, blood, albuminous matter, etc., present in the fabrics must be removed by a regular washing process in order to prevent setting of stains during the boil.

The amount of boiling necessary will vary from two to eight hours, according to the degree or type of stain. Lightly stained linen may clear up in the minimum time, while the very heavily stained linens may require the maximum time.

The work is removed from the boiler and included in the washing process of a load of white work. If it is stained by rust, this can be removed by soaking in a solution of oxalic acid (use 1 oz. oxalic acid for 6 lb. work) at 180°F. for 15 minutes. Then give at least two hot rinses to remove the oxalic acid.

An Unknown Stain is to be treated only after the washing process has failed to remove it.

1. Solvents. Spot with a solvent, e.g. acetone, amyl acetate, benzene, benzine, carbon disulphide, carbon tetrachloride, chloroform, ether, methylated spirits, trichlorethylene and turpentine, but with acetate rayon use only benzene, benzine, carbon disulphide, carbon tetrachloride, turpentine, amyl acetate, and trichlorethylene.

2. Glauber Salts. Certain dyes in wools, silks and acetate rayon are removed by the following procedure. Immerse the article in a cold 2% solution of Glauber salts and gradually raise the temperature until stripping occurs. If there is no visible effect when the temperature reaches 180°F. this treatment must be discontinued.
3. Spirit Soap and Oleic Acid or Olein Treatment. Spirit soap is useful for removing stains from silks and woollens but on cotton and linen the oleic acid treatment should be given. In both cases the spirit soap or the oleic acid is rubbed well into the interstices of the cloth, then the article is submitted to a normal washing process. In the case of more resistant stains in cotton and linen the oleic acid may be scrubbed out, using a scrubbing brush and a hot alkaline solution (washing soda or metasilicate).

Oleic acid and trichlorethylene mixed in equal parts is useful for greasy stains on white work. Rub the mixture well into the stained area and leave for 20 minutes; then put the article into the boil of a normal white work washing process.

4. Digestive Agents. 1% solution of pepsin or malt extract acidified with a few drops of dilute hydrochloric acid is used as a digestive agent. Dampen the stain with either of these mixtures and leave for about 40 minutes, and keep moist with the solution during this time (a cover will prevent rapid evaporation). Then re-wash the article.
5. Hydrofluoric acid. It is not used as an agent for general treatment, but a 3:1 water to commercial acid solution is very useful for spotting. Special precautions must be taken when using this reagent, as it is a very powerful acid, which attacks glass and must therefore be kept in a guttapercha or Bakelite bottle. Severe burns may result if it is allowed to come into contact with the skin.
6. Sodium hydrosulphite. This reducing bleach may cause damage to weighted silks but very little to cotton, linen and wool. Soak the area in a hot 1% solution for 5 minutes or, if the stain is small, after first wetting the area, rub in a pinch of sodium hydrosulphite. Spot with hydrofluoric acid and wash off almost immediately. Rinse thoroughly.

Oxidising Bleaches

An oxidising bleach treatment can be given with sodium hypochlorite bleach, with hydrogen peroxide or with potassium permanganate.

Sodium hypochlorite should be used only on white cotton, linen and rayon fabrics, and after the treatment the fabrics should be carefully rinsed to remove all traces of the bleach. The mildest method of using hypochlorite bleach is to soak the stained materials in a cold solution containing 1%—2% available chlorine. It may take several hours to remove stains in this way but it has the advantage of having a minimum effect on the strength of the fabric. Warming the solution to 140°F. will speed up the action, so will increasing the concentration to 5% available chlorine. The most rapid method of hypochlorite bleaching (and the most destructive to the fabric) is to dip the stained area alternately in a bleach solution containing 5% available chlorine and an acetic acid solution made up with 3 ounces of 56% acetic acid per gallon of water.

Hydrogen peroxide can be used on all white cotton, silk, wool and rayon fabrics and on most coloured materials. The stained articles should be completely immersed in a 1% solution of hydrogen peroxide (cold or warm), made slightly alkaline with ammonia. Bleaching will generally take several hours or even overnight to produce best results. When the stain is removed, rinse the fabric well to remove the peroxide. While hydrogen peroxide does take considerable time to be effective, it is far milder in its action on fabrics and colours than sodium hypochlorite or potassium permanganate.

The permanganate treatment consists of a two-step process, as follows:

1. Soak the stained area for 1 to 2 minutes in a warm (120°F.—130°F.) solution made up with 3 ounces of potassium permanganate dissolved in a gallon of water.
2. Rinse to remove the excess potassium permanganate solution, then work the stained area in a hot (160°—180°F.) solution containing 3 ounces of oxalic acid per gallon of water. Continue this until all of the brown colour has disappeared, then rinse well to remove the oxalic acid.

STAINLESS STEEL

STERILIZATION

The object of sterilisation is to destroy bacteria and to prevent the spread of disease and infection. The processes most commonly used are heat (applied in various forms), chemicals (such as chloroxylene solutions, formaldehyde and formalin), heat-resisting oil (particularly appropriate for scalpels and instruments with rotating parts), filtration, and violet rays. Of these the application of heat by means of boiling water or steam is the most usual method.

Metal and rubber goods may be treated by immersion in boiling water for 20/30 minutes, sodium carbonate being added to prevent rusting in the case of the former. Whilst many bacteria are destroyed by boiling water at a maximum temperature of 100°C., resistant types require a temperature of 120°C., for which a pressure steriliser is necessary. Steam heating is more pervasive, sterilisation by this process operating by penetration into every corner, cranny and pore. It has been estimated that the efficiency is 97 per cent.

At 160°C. hot-air sterilisation may be used for articles made of glass, and can also be used for dressings, cotton wool, powder, etc.—but not soldered articles (unless special solder is used), since the melting point of solder is 160°C. Sterilising time for glass instruments is one hour and for powder and dressings two hours.

The entire process of sterilisation should be under the control of a responsible officer and bacteriological tests should be made regularly.

STORAGE SPACE (FUELS)

STOREROOM EQUIPMENT

Shortage of space is a problem in many hospitals, and in the case of stores at least it is often aggravated by the continued use of heavy, inflexible and unadjustable equipment.

Flexible steel shelving built on the unit principle may be used to overcome the difficulty. It may be used for food storage or for the other main classes of hospital storage such as hardware, linen and bedding, and dispensary stores. An advantage is that systems of steel shelving are capable of many forms of subdivision; moreover, steel is in general more hygienic than wooden shelving, and also less inflammable and less subject to attack by dry rot and insect pests.

Mobile systems of stores shelves and cupboards are also available in various combinations, the usual method of arrangement being to have a row of fixed shelving backing against a wall, with three or four rows of mobile shelves, each one unit less than the fixed row, immediately in front. This eliminates the need for corridors to get at any of the units or bays in the multiple stack. Any unit in any of the rows behind the first is made easily accessible by moving the units in the row immediately preceding sufficiently far apart to permit passage. For multiple stacks in the centre of a storeroom, two fixed rows are stood back to back with three or four rows of mobile shelves on each side.

TEXTILES

Points in Purchasing

Where samples of fabrics can be supplied for test a wealth of valuable information which the buyer cannot find out for himself can be revealed by general serviceability tests carried out at a test station. The initial sum spent in testing fees would represent a mere fraction in bulk buying of the total sum to be expended and may well be the means of saving large sums dissipated on unreliable or unsuitable goods.

Quality in Woven Fabrics. The quality of woven fabrics is determined by the following factors:—

Handle. A fabric's handle is its softness, smoothness and suppleness which may be determined by gripping it tightly in the hand and releasing the pressure quickly. Resistance to creasing can thus be noted. Wool, silk and acetate rayon have good non-crush properties and soon recover from the crumpled state. Considerable experience, however, is needed adequately to judge the handle of a fabric. Textile auxiliaries can be used to modify the handle, i.e. make it more resistant to crushing, etc. Generally cotton handles soft and warm, linen firm and cold, real silk crackles and wool handles soft or firm according both to its quality and type.

Thickness. The thickness of a material is determined by a micrometer; several measurements should be made in different places.

Density. The density of a fabric is judged by viewing it against the light. With filled fabrics it may first be necessary to wash the fabric in water containing soda.

Weight. Suitings and dress fabrics are judged by the weight of the material per square metre. A test portion of 10 square cm. is weighed. The weight of the material can then be obtained by multiplication. Weight of fabric lengths can then easily be calculated. Although weight is important other factors like filling should also be considered.

Strength. A test of the material between finger and thumb will give good results, although special scientific apparatus is available for testing strength. Fabrics made with folded yarns spun from long staple fibres are stronger than those made from short or shoddy wool fibres. Worsted fabrics are stronger than woollens.

Structure. The structure of a material is tested by pulling a representative sample of at least 100 sq. cm. to pieces. The various types of threads are then weighed.

Resistance to Rubbing. The resistance to friction of a material is one of the most important tests. By this test inferior wearing weft is revealed especially if it forms the surface of the fabric. To test a fabric it should be rubbed quickly with a moistened finger or stroked with a stiff brush. Another method is to scratch the surface with the finger nail.

These tests easily reveal that materials made of fine firm wool fibres wear better than those manufactured from soft short wools. More accurate testing is carried out by a special machine by which a piece of fabric is rubbed against an abrasive under a given weight until a standard degree of wear is reached.

Bursting Strength. In this test a piece of fabric is stretched over a hole and the bursting strength is measured by the force in kilograms per sq. centimeter required to burst through it. The extensibility of a fabric can be tested at the same time by the extent to which it stretches before bursting. This is an important test because many fabrics are subject to this type of strain in use.

Water Repellency. The resistance of a fabric to wetting. Many types of fabric are now shower proofed by chemical treatment, but complete resistance can be obtained only by impregnating the fabric with rubber or oil.

The usual form of test is the funnel or drop test, by which the number of drops are measured before the fabric becomes soaked and water comes through. A fabric claimed to be waterproof should remain waterproof after creasing.

Finish. It is desirable to know how a fabric is finished. Heavy fillings are recognised by a cloudy appearance against the light. Another test is to crumple a piece of the material and compare it with the original. If the fabric is rubbed against a glass plate the filling will come out as dust. Another method is to weigh, then boil the test portion, dry it, allow it to condition in air for 24 hours, then re-weigh; the loss of weight is the filling. If it is of poor appearance and limp after boiling and rubbing then the material is heavily filled. Highly lustrous fabrics owe their brightness to special finishing treatments such as calendering and pressing. When they are boiled they become matt and rough. Steeping in water will reveal the normal hairy appearance of a smooth fabric which (unless it has been sheared, wool; or singed, cotton) has probably been produced by pressing.

Air Permeability. The volume of air passing through a material under standard pressure conditions.

Colour Fastness. The fastness of colours to washing is tested by rubbing fabric by hand after dipping in boiling soap solution. The only test for fastness to light is exposure for a suitable period and subsequent comparison. Colour fastness with regard to perspiration can be tested by moistening the fabric with strong salt solution, allowing the material to dry, brushing it and then comparing with the original untouched material.

Shrinkability. The shrinkability of a material is judged by an ironing test. One yard of the material is placed between damp cotton fabrics and then gently ironed until it is dry. After conditioning the area shrinkage can be measured. If a fabric is claimed to be unshrinkable then it must retain its original size after treatment. Shrinking is also revealed by cockling of the fabric under hot ironing.

Characteristics

The characteristics of textiles are handle, lustre, fineness, felting, firmness, softness, elasticity and absorption. Linen, cotton and wool have these qualities in varying degrees and their major characteristics are given below :—

LINEN

The characteristics of linen fabrics are :—

- (1) A fine lustre due to the reflecting smoothness of the fibre.
- (2) Non-porosity of the fibres which therefore do not take on dirt so easily.
- (3) The fibres are stiff and not elastic, consequently linen materials crease easily and need frequent washing.
- (4) Readily absorb water and dry quickly.
- (5) Bleach and dye readily, but lack fastness of colours.
- (6) Owing to the longer fibres do not lint easily like cotton.

- (7) Resistant to wear because the fibres are longer and lie more closely than cotton.
- (8) Good conductors of heat and therefore cool to wear.

These qualities are said to render linen the best material for handkerchiefs, towels, dish cloths, sheets, table-cloths, etc.

COTTON

The characteristics of cotton are :—

- (1) Cotton is cool to the touch and a non-conductor of heat.
- (2) It washes easily.
- (3) It is serviceable and inexpensive.
- (4) Body or thickness may be given to it by starching.
- (5) Cotton only shrinks when loosely woven, due to the loss of sizing.
- (6) Crushes easily because it lacks natural body or stiffness.
- (7) Wrinkles easily, but does not lose shape.
- (8) Not so elastic as wool or silks.
- (9) Does not take dye so easily as wool and silks.
- (10) Takes on dirt fairly readily.
- (11) Less absorbent than linen.

WOOL

Wool's chief characteristics are :—

- (1) Shrinking or felting which is due to the scale with which the fibre is covered.
- (2) High-grade wool fibres have a close weave which improves their spinning qualities and increases elasticity.
- (3) High tensile strength and therefore resistant to hard wear.
- (4) A poor conductor of heat and therefore warm.
- (5) Elastic and in consequence woollen materials retain their shape. More elastic than cotton.
- (6) Dyes well.
- (7) Does not soil easily unlike cotton. This is due to the smoothness of the scales on the fibre.
- (8) Worsted fabrics wear shiny owing to the smoothness of the surface.
- (9) Woollen fabrics do not tailor so easily as worsteds as their softness does not permit shape to be retained so readily.

Care of Hospital Fabrics

The importance of preserving linen and lengthening its life is paramount in present circumstances and a great deal can be done towards this by the organisation of a proper system of linen care in the hospital. A central linen room, if properly administered, can have an important place in this scheme and will make it easier to rotate the linen and remove those pieces needing repair and replacement.

(See below, Central Linen Room—Organisation.)

BLANKETS

Laundering is the first important factor in the care of blankets. A single bad laundering will almost ruin a good blanket. Woollen fabrics shrink rapidly if subjected to sudden changes of temperature when wet.

Alkalis attack the wool itself, and rubbing is conducive to felting. For washing blankets it is suggested that only a low titer soap with no builder should be used and in a sufficient amount to produce four to six inch suds. The temperature of the water should never exceed 105°F. and is better if kept at from 90° to 95°F. The machine should be run slowly to avoid undue rubbing. Drying should be carried out under tension and the blankets protected from sudden changes of temperature.

The second factor is moth attack. As a protection against moths the blankets should first be washed and when dry, sprinkled with dichlorobenzene flakes (about $\frac{1}{4}$ ounce per blanket), folded and wrapped up in brown paper in bundles of not more than five. All openings in the paper should be sealed with gummed paper. The blankets can then be stored in a cool, dry, well-ventilated room.

Paradichlorobenzene will kill both larvae and moths and prevent their future ingress. Some of these chemical compounds need to be sprayed and some require immersion. Another method of disposing of moths is to subject the blankets to a temperature of 135°F. in a steriliser. This is sufficient to kill all larvae. A cold storage method is to drop the temperature to 18°F. for a few hours to kill existing larvae. Then in order to permit the emergence of larvae from any unhatched eggs raise the temperature to 50° and then kill these new larvae by once again dropping the temperature to 18°F. Storage can be continued at 40°.

SHEETS

With regard to the care of sheets there are several points which should be watched in the avoidance of excessive wear. In the laundry too much bleaching, which in any case weakens the fibres, and insufficient rinsing should be avoided. Sheets should not be too small, for patients subject small sheets to undue strain in trying to adjust them. Overwork can be avoided by not having too small a stock of linen. Care in handling is another important factor. If they are subjected to rough usage in stripping beds or in the laundry machine this will shorten their life unnecessarily. Mildew can be avoided by not leaving wet sheets in bundles in hot muggy weather.

CLOTHING

The care of clothing is, generally speaking, the avoidance of ill use. The major influences causing deterioration of clothing are sunlight, dampness, various kinds of organisms, and every-day wear and tear.

Sunlight. Sunlight sets up chemical changes in fabrics and reduces the strength of the fibres. It causes a gradual decomposition of the fibre substances into a simpler molecular structure. Ultimately these new chemical substances are found to be soluble in water or dilute alkalis. It is an important consideration because the weakness of a fabric is not noted until it has been washed in soap or soda liquor where some of it dissolves and the weakness becomes at once apparent. Fortunately it is a slow process, but some of the materials designed to improve the handle or give colour to fabrics hasten the deterioration.

Dampness. Dampness is bad for clothes for two reasons. First water in itself brings decomposition by swelling the fibres and its presence assists any other harmful substance to attack the fabric. The second reason is that it increases the activity of bacteria. If the material is sufficiently dry they remain inactive, but if the dampness of a fabric is increased they at once become active and produce rapid deterioration and serious loss of strength.

High Temperatures. In certain materials high temperatures may cause a decomposition of the fibre substance itself. Apart from this they tend to have an activating effect on substances which are present in the fabric. Care should be taken to avoid very high temperatures with nylons and acetate rayons as they can be melted.

Perspiration. As perspiration can be both acid and alkaline it can be most harmful to fabrics. When it is fresh it is acid, but when stale it ferments and becomes alkaline owing to the formation of ammonia. Since most fabrics are adversely affected by acids or alkalis, materials made of animal or vegetable fibres will sooner or later become impoverished. Perspiration is also an excellent nutrient material for bacteria.

Wear and Tear. Very little can be done to prevent wear and tear which occurs from abrasion and flexing of the fibres in use. As this process goes on the fibres break and ultimately a thread goes, which by increasing the local strain, permits a hole to appear. The only remedy is darning and mending in time to prevent excessive strain and a worsening of the hole in the fabrics.

Moth. The larvae of clothes moths eat only woollen fabrics. There is stated to be only one certain preventative against moth and that is chemical treatment which makes the material uneatable or actually poisonous to the larvae. The most satisfactory solution is to have these materials applied during dyeing and finishing of clothing. The use of moth balls is considered of doubtful value. (For further information on moths see Blankets above.)

Felting of Wool. The felting or matting of woollen garments is considerably accelerated by the use of hot water. The process is slow in cold water, but most rapid in water about as hot as the hand can bear. It is best avoided by squeezing and rubbing as little as possible. Badly soiled woollens however cannot be washed clean under such mild treatment and some shrinking will be found to occur ultimately.

Bleaching. As bleaching, usually carried out by a chlorinating agent, oxidises the cellulose of cotton clothing at the same time as it whitens, it follows that it is a process of degradation of the material by gaining whiteness at the expense of tensile strength. Provided, however, bleaching is carefully controlled and carried out by skilled operatives the life of articles is little affected.

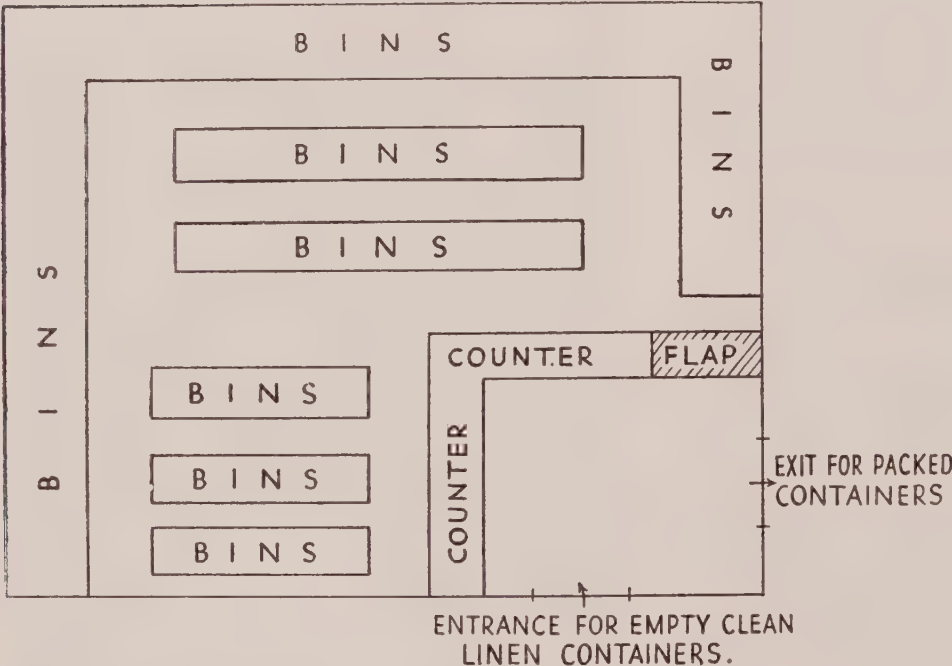

POINTS TO BE NOTED WITH REFERENCE TO SOME MATERIALS

Cellulose Fibres—Cotton, linen, viscose and cuprammonium rayons—are easily deteriorated by acids, but fairly resistant to alkalis. Animal or protein fibres—silk, wool, etc.—are easily attacked by alkalis and are fairly resistant to acids. Neither of these categories are affected by organic solvents like carbon tetrachloride, trichloroethylene, white spirit or petrol. Acetate Rayon is changed by exposure to alkalis (for example a warm solution of washing soda) so that it becomes regenerated cellulose. It usually becomes weakened in addition to

This results in wards and departments not needing to hold stocks to last more than 72 hours with a consequent saving in ward storage space. In order to operate this method each article of linen needs to be coded. This eliminates errors due to incorrect description. Similar articles, however, can still be used for different having its textile qualities completely changed. It is harmed by acids in the same way as cotton and viscose rayon. If it is ironed at too high a temperature it will soften the fabric. Nylon and vinyon are affected similarly. Acetate rayon is swollen or affected by organic solvents particularly when they are hot. If they should be used for any special purpose a test should be made on a waste portion of the material to see if there is any adverse effect. Acetate rayon and nylon are resistant to bacteria. Viscose, cuprammonium and acetate rayons lose tensile strength when wet and tear quite easily so care should be taken when washing. Neither nylon nor vinyon lose tensile strength when wet.

In this system, for each article of soiled linen discarded by a ward in the morning a corresponding clean article is issued to replace it by the central linen room the same day.

purposes by using different code numbers; for example:—
Sheets, patients 156
Sheets, staff 157

Two rooms will also be needed, one as a clean linen room and the other as a soiled linen room.

Operation of System

Each ward has a laundry check list book containing forms listing all articles in use with their code numbers, also columns in which to enter totals for "clean" and "dirty" against each article and totals of all articles. Spaces are given for "Checked Dirty", "Received Dirty", "Checked Clean" and "Received Clean". Alternate forms are perforated. The previous day's dirty articles are sorted out by the ward and totals entered in the dirty column against each code number. After checking the total number of articles against the total shown on the form the "checked dirty" space is initialled.

Upon receipt of the soiled linen container including the perforated copy of the form in the soiled linen room, the contents are checked against the laundry check list and initialled in the "checked dirty" space. The form then passes to the clean linen room.

For each article shown in the dirty column a clean one is issued by the clean linen room and the form initialled in the "checked clean" space. The form is then passed to the central linen room clerk, who enters the figures in the clean column of the analysis sheet. Down the longer side, on the left of this form, is a list of articles with code numbers. At the top are the names of the wards. The whole form is then cross-ruled into squares for entries to be made in each ward-column of the quantity against each article. On the right is a column for code number totals and at the bottom spaces for ward totals.

The central linen room clerk initials the clean column total of the laundry check list which is passed back to the clean linen room. The container of clean linen is then delivered to the ward where it is checked and the "received clean" space on the laundry check list initialled and the form passed back to the central linen room for filing. This procedure takes place in the morning.

Operation of Soiled Linen Room

Every morning the articles in each container are checked by the soiled linen checker who having initialled the laundry check list frees the articles for binning according to their code numbers. Finally, before packing and dispatch to the laundry, when all consignments have been checked the numbers of articles in each bin are recorded on a summary sheet which is then totalled. An agreement of this total must then be obtained from the central linen room clerk who will have completed the analysis sheet. If there is a difference, the figures for each code number can be called over between the summary sheet and analysis sheet, thereby isolating the difference to one or more code numbers which can then be rechecked and the difference settled.

On agreement, the external laundry list (in duplicate) is filled in and one copy is collected with the dirty linen by the laundry. This form comprises columns of code numbers against each of which is a space for "Number sent" and "Number returned." At the bottom are four spaces for totals "sent by hospital," "received by laundry," "returned by laundry," "returned at hospital."

Operation of Clean Linen Room

The criterion of smooth running of the clean linen room is a steady flow of laundry check lists from the soiled linen room. As each list is received a clean consignment is made up on a one-for-one basis of the articles shown against each code number. As each code number is dealt with the numbers of articles are entered in the clean column of the laundry check list. On completion the "checked clean" space is initialled. The total figure is then initialled by the central linen room clerk who returns the form to the clean linen room. The filled clean container is then delivered to the ward.

In the afternoon the bulk consignment of clean laundry is received from the laundry together with the copy of the external laundry list. The articles are at once checked and binned according to code numbers. A record is kept on a summary sheet. The figures against each code number are then totalled.

Immediately the consignment of laundry is counted the figures entered by the laundry on the external laundry list must be checked with those shown against each code number on the summary sheet. Should there be a difference a recheck of the relevant coded articles must be carried out. If the difference persists between the "sent" figure and "returned" the excess or deficiency must be entered on a statement of deficiencies form. This shows spaces for the code number, number of articles sent, number of articles returned (both laundry and hospital count) and number of articles deficient (or in excess).

Stock Records for Clean Linen

It is suggested that a better control is obtained by having the bin records kept by the central linen room clerk. A separate bin card is allocated to each code number on which the following entries are made:—

- (1) Issues—posted from the horizontal total for the appropriate code number on the analysis sheet.
- (2) Receipts—posted from the "returned" column (amended figure, if necessary, from hospital recount) of the external laundry list.
- (3) Balance—calculated from the balance of the previous day and the net increase or decrease between the day's issues and receipts.

The bin cards are filed numerically according to code number in a container in the central linen room clerk's office.

There should be two spaces marked "maximum" and "minimum" stocks on the bin cards. These figures will depend on: (a) the space available in the clean linen room bins; and (b) the normal daily issues to wards and departments. It is not advisable, however, for these entries to be made until the central linen room has been working for at least a month.

The central linen room clerk when posting the bin cards and calculating the figure to be put in the balance column should constantly refer to the "maximum" and "minimum" figures. If the balance exceeds the "maximum" stock, the responsible officer for the central linen room, on being notified, will arrange the transfer of surplus stock to the reserve stock. If the balance figure is less than the "minimum" stock a requisition must be made immediately for the transfer of items to make up from the reserve stock.

VENTILATION

(See also under Heating)

The minimum standard of ventilation required for health cannot accurately be determined, but in Post-War Building Study No. 19, it is assumed that under normal conditions 600 cu. ft. per person per hour is the minimum requirement. The rate of ventilation is generally expressed by the number of complete changes of the total volume of air in a room per hour. The general practice in hospitals is to allow for three changes of air per hour except in special areas such as the operating theatre. Excessive ventilation gives rise to unnecessary draughts under doors, windows, etc.

The ventilation of buildings is closely bound up with the subject of heating. Under that head will be found a table of air changes per hour for each section of the hospital based on figures given by the Institution of Heating and Ventilating Engineers in its publication. The Computation of Heat Requirements for Buildings.

Natural System

In normal living rooms the windows and fire place aperture supply adequate ventilation. In large buildings, however, the building itself is designed to encourage the circulation of air by natural means without causing draughts. Cross-ventilation permits the use of smaller intakes in windows and employs the difference in atmospheric pressure on two sides of a building (which is always present even in conditions of little air movement) to cause the flow of air through the rooms. Air is withdrawn from the windows on the side of the building with the lower atmospheric pressure and there are no draughts straight through the rooms from the windward side. Another system of supplying natural ventilation when windows and doors are closed is by dividing walls into two with an air cavity between. A supply of air is then drawn in at the base of the building and discharged into the roof. Under each window an inlet can be provided to allow the fresh air to enter the wards after passing over the radiators. Outlets above each window allow the heated and impure air to pass up into a separate shaft and out of the eaves on either side of the hospital depending on the direction of the wind.

Plenum System

This is a mechanical system by which the volumes of air delivered and extracted are balanced by means of fans. Windows and doors are kept closed and a slight pressure is maintained in the rooms served. Humidity and temperature control are usually included in this type of ventilation. There are two variants of this system, one with a mechanical inlet where the air is drawn in by means of a fan and the impure air is allowed to escape through natural outlets, and the other where incoming air enters through natural inlets and is then extracted mechanically. In the former the air is often cleaned and heated, in the latter method treatment of the air is unusual.

Operating Theatres

It has been suggested by various authorities that the extract ventilation from the operating theatre should if possible take place from the sterilising room so as to ensure that the air stream is through the theatre and then through the sterilising room and then out. If the reverse procedure is adopted there is a possibility of steam being drawn into the theatre causing condensation on the walls. (For further notes on heating and ventilating special departments see under Heating).

Prevention of Cross Infection

Recent research into the quantity of infectious organisms present in the air in wards and operating theatres of hospitals has led to the formulation of the following general measures for the prevention of cross infection.

Bed Spacing

Overcrowding of patients should always be avoided. The Ministry of Health recommends for multiple bed wards for infectious diseases that the distance between bed centres should not be less than 12 ft. In children's general wards and maternity units it is recommended in The Control of Cross Infection in Hospitals that this distance, wherever possible, should be adhered to and that in no circumstances should the distance between bed centres drop to less than 8 ft.

Face Masks

Face masks should be of an efficient type consisting of at least six layers of 40-mesh gauze or two layers of gauze with an impermeable cellophane or paper insert.

Blankets

The careful handling of blankets to minimise the scattering of dust particles should be stressed and oil treatment should be considered.

Oiling of Floors

The memorandum on The Control of Cross Infection in Hospitals recommends the treatment of wood and linoleum floors in wards and passages with spindle oil, as then the dust does not rise when sweeping is in process. Rubber composition and concrete floors should not be oiled but either washed, vacuum cleaned, or sprinkled with damp sawdust before sweeping. Dusters should be damp and no dry dusting should be done.

Spindle oil is an inexpensive crude petroleum used in the cotton industry as a lubricant and is readily obtainable. About one gallon per 800-1,000 sq.ft. is the quantity required per application. It should only be applied to wood or linoleum floors. Rubber is damaged by it and it should, therefore, not be used on this type of flooring. The slipperiness of an oiled floor wears off after a few hours.

The method of application recommended is first to scrub the floor to remove old polish, leave it to dry for 24 hours and then apply the oil quickly and sparingly with large mops at times of least traffic. Oiled floors should be swept with dry brushes of medium hardness and it will be found that the dust becomes matted together in rolls without rising.

Ventilation

The importance of adequate ventilation is stressed for it has been found that when

Windows are wide open the microbic content of air in wards is little higher than the outside air, whereas when windows are closed, even with no bed-making in progress, the count obtained is far higher than in outside air. Windows should always be opened after bedmaking and dressing.

Good lighting is a further important factor as daylight even through glass is bactericidal.

Operating Theatres

The chief source of infection in many operating theatres has been found to be the dirty air sucked under the doors leading to adjacent rooms and corridors. This is due to the prevalent use of exhaust fans without any corresponding input fans.

This trouble can be overcome by the installation of a plenum system which maintains a slight positive pressure in the theatre so that air escapes under the doors. This will prevent dust, and organisms which may fall to the floor from ward blankets, from being sucked into the theatre. The other major source is textile fabrics containing wool which are said in contrast to cotton fabrics, to be liable to return from the laundry bearing a large number of bacteria. Badly fitting masks are another source of airborne infection.

Precautions Affecting Staff

All student nurses and ward orderlies should be warned early in their training of the risks of cross infection and be instructed in the principles of the spread of infection and of all methods for its control. The medical Research Council Memorandum on this subject (see reference below) recommends that nurses should be given a short course of practical bacteriology as applied to hospital hygiene, and that domestic, kitchen and porter staffs should be given elementary instruction in hygiene and its relation to their particular duties and responsibilities.

Out-patient Departments

The following matters should receive particular attention in out-patient departments: the disinfection of clinical thermometers and spatulas, provision of individual robes for examination rooms, washing facilities, collection and disposal of specimens, sterilisation of instruments and bowls, disinfection of canteen cutlery and crockery.

Preventive Measures

The following methods have been tried by various hospitals as a means of reducing the bacterial contamination of air in operating theatres.

The first is the provision of an air intake preferably from an inlet 10 to 15 feet above roof level. This air can then be filtered as circumstances require. Even after filtration through the cheaper types of filter using cotton wool, oiled metal or cloth it will be very much cleaner than the air ordinarily present in hospitals. Ten changes of air per hour are recommended for small theatres and six for larger ones as an economical minimum.

Although the exclusion of all non-sterile clothing is an ideal which does not appear to be practical at present, ward blankets and bed linen should always be excluded from the theatre, and also from the hall and anaesthetic room, unless plenum ventilation is used. Another measure suggested is the daily provision of fresh sterile linen or cotton covers for such woollen coverings as are used in the theatre. Two further suggestions are the provision of oiled night gowns or pyjamas for patients before operations, and rather more care to be paid to the clothing of stretcher bearers and other theatre personnel than is customary.

VERMIN EXTERMINATION

Insects

Although general principles of treatment can be adduced for treatment of insects as a whole there are of course variations from species to species. The cockroach for example is fairly resistant to D.D.T., the housefly on the other hand is not.

Insecticides

A popular form of insecticide is that which is produced as a solution of insecticidal ingredients in oil. These can be applied by means of a fine insecticidal mist from a hand sprayer. Compounds used in this way are pyrethrum, nicotine, D.D.T., gammexine and rotenone.

Pyrethrum and rotenone are both plant extracts of Asiatic origin. These insecticides produce a knock-down effect and are usually applied by spray or atomiser. Kerosene or paraffin odour is sometimes associated with sprayed insecticides, but the odour has been in many cases eliminated. Modern commercial products are usually non-staining and non-poisonous to warm blooded animals—and invariably harmless to human beings.

Powders as well as sprays are also marketed. Some of these are simply pyrethrum compounds, some containing D.D.T. and some containing both.

D.D.T. Preparations

Dichloro-Diphenyl-Trichlorethane (D.D.T.) was mainly developed in recent years largely due to the needs of the war and the sources of supply of the older insecticides like pyrethrum being under Japanese control, and the urgent military need for some other product to take their place. D.D.T. has a paralysing effect on the nervous system of insects and acts as a stomach poison, and does not have a knock-down effect. It is extremely stable and not subject to the oxidising effect of air and light which affect pyrethrum compounds. It requires processing and combination with other agents and like the older insecticides has a number of modes of application. Pyrethrum and D.D.T. together have proved an effective compound. Their use in an activated paint film has yielded good results against cockroaches and beetles, if they are applied to surfaces which attract the insects such as near lights, warmth and where food smells are strong. Combinations of D.D.T. and pyrethrum are also marketed as a spray the residual deposits of which remain toxic to flies, fleas and bugs for several weeks after spraying. Powders containing D.D.T. can also be obtained and these are scattered by means of a blower. Another kind is in the form of a vapour which being ignited spreads in a dense cloud penetrating cracks and crevices which cannot be reached by dust or spray.

Smooth surfaces, old paint and concrete hold D.D.T. for a considerable time. The Ministry of Agriculture, however, suggest that residual sprays are quite effective on the usual warehouse lime wash.

Ants

A very small red ant is the kind most often found in the basements and foundations of hospitals. It infests larders and kitchens, feeding on a wide variety of human food. The best recommended method of extermination is by the use of poison bait as follows:—6 parts by bulk sodium fluoride, 2 parts by bulk fresh pyrethrum powder, two parts by bulk corn starch. This should be sprinkled in the runways of the ants, care being taken that foodstuffs are not contaminated and that it is out of the reach of domestic animals and children. Grease banding will help to prevent ants gaining access from outside.

Bed Bugs

Common hiding places of the bed bug are in mattresses and the crevices of beds, in the cracks of furniture, on the underside of seats and chairs, in floor boards and in cracks in wall plaster. D.D.T. has given good results. Both five per cent. D.D.T. powder and five per cent. D.D.T. sprays have been used with complete success against long standing infestations. The older method on heavily infested premises which was certain to kill both bugs and their eggs was by the use of hydrocyanic acid gas. The Hydrogen Cyanide (Fumigation) Act, 1937, lays down the precautions to be taken.

Cockroaches

Two species are common in this country, both kinds like the dark and live in cracks and crevices in kitchens and laundries, etc. They eat a variety of substances, for example, paper and leather, apart from human food.

Poison baits are the usual means of extermination but it is never completely effective. D.D.T. embodied in oil-bound distempers has yielded good results as mentioned above. After treatment cracks and crevices should be made good particularly in skirtings. Paper pulp and size with putty or cement mortar are effective.

Crickets

These creatures normally live near hot pipes, hearths and similar warm places. Crickets live on crumbs and similar refuse; decaying organic matter provides them with a breeding ground. Poison bait can be employed to destroy these insects. An effective poison is 6 parts by bulk sodium flouride, 2 parts by bulk fresh pyrethrum powder, 2 parts by bulk of corn starch. D.D.T. is highly toxic to crickets. After treatment it is advisable to fill up cracks and crevices with pulp of paper and size.

Fleas

There are several kinds of fleas found in this country, the human flea, the dog flea, the cat flea, and occasionally the plague flea. It is important to keep domestic animals free from fleas. If a room is seriously infested, flaked naphthalene or para-dichlor-benzene crystals should be sprinkled on the floor and the room shut up. Fumigation with sulphur and spraying with one of the light paraffin-basis sprays is also an effective method of extermination.

Rats

The presence of rats can usually be ascertained by a knowledge of the signs of nesting places, feeding places and runs between the two. Nesting material, food and water and undisturbed nesting sites are always necessary conditions for the formation of a rat colony. There are eight kinds of traces indicating a rat infestation:—(1) Smears formed by the formation of a path and the rubbing of the rats bodies on projections and mud smears from their feet. (2) The presence of holes and scrapes. (3) Runways, i.e. beaten down tracks in earth or mounds of refuse. (4) Gnawing marks on food, soap or lead piping. (5) Drop-pings. (6) Foot marks. (7) Tail marks. (8) Damage to food stocks.

Three arbitrary though convenient classifications of infestation can be estimated from the above signs. Minor, confined to infestations of less than twenty rats. Major, from twenty to two hundred rats. Most important infestations fall in this category. Reservoir, more than two hundred rats. Large infestations are liable to colonise and infest other areas in the neighbourhood.

Control Methods—Poison

Density of rat population is most important. This should be found out before attempting control as diffuse populations are more difficult to deal with. It is useless to deal only with rats in a building if they have connections with those living in the sewers. A general survey of an infestation should give a rough knowledge of the rat population and the relation between that in question and other infestations. This will show where most of the rats are living and feeding and in consequence where baits can most advantageously be laid.

Poisoning is generally the best method of dealing with rats. It has generally been found, however, that preliminary baiting without poison is essential, as rats are suspicious creatures and tend only to nibble the bait at first. This is enough to cause illness but not to kill them. The best method is therefore to lay a plain bait for several nights to ensure that the rats are conditioned by use into eating the bait and when the poison is added they will eat it readily and die.

Hole baiting is the most efficient method. When an infestation can entirely be treated in this way two days prebaiting only is needed and post-baiting is not needed at all. In buildings, surface baiting is most commonly used. Bait must be laid on runs or as near nesting sites as possible. Containers are principally a safety measure for the security of domestic animals. The same base must be used each time both for prebaiting and poison. Suggested bases are damp sausage, a medium grade used with its own weight of water, sugar meal, bread mash and soaked wheat. Poisons are zinc phosphide, arsenious oxide, red squill powder and one antu (alphanaphthyl-thio-urea) which is highly effective but not widely available.

An effective method for dealing with infestations in the open and where the holes are easily identifiable is dusting with powders that liberate a poisonous gas. The powder may be introduced by a spoon tied to a stick or by a pump. Cyanide powders should not be used when there is a high wind or in buildings where human beings are liable to breathe it. Neither should they be used in wet weather or on wet ground as the poison gas is soluble in water.

Trapping

The best type of trap to use is a breakback with a treadle. This method is only successful if there are a small number of rats, i.e. to kill off the remainder after poison, and a large number of traps are used. Traps should be put down baited but unset for four or five nights to overcome the rats' suspicions.

Procedure after killing rats

After treatment a building should be given a thorough survey and all holes in outside walls filled with fine concrete. Broken fittings should be renewed and wood panelling and door frames should be fitted with sheet metal at vulnerable places as a protection against gnawing. Defective drains should be repaired.

It is important to remember that an infested area should not, in general, be disturbed until after treatment, but then all food should be made inaccessible, accumulations of rubbish removed and cover denied to the rats.

WASHING, ESSENTIALS OF GOOD

WATER SOFTENING

The degree of hardness of water varies a great deal throughout the British Isles and in some districts a very high degree both of permanent and temporary hardness is to be found. On the other hand, in some cases, it actually has to be artificially hardened to prevent trouble with distributive pipework. From the hospital engineer's point of view water softening is often necessary to prevent scale deposit in boilers; it is also needed to keep hot-water cylinders and distributive pipework free from scale not only from the point of view of fuel economy but of obstruction in supply.

Water softening is necessary only for water which is to be heated. This is excluding hot water heating systems, for the treatment of which see notes below. Cold water does not need treatment.

Types of Plant

Two types of water softening plant are in common use, first the lime soda process and second the base exchange or zeolite process. The first employs lime and soda to reduce hardness and the second either a natural or artificial zeolitic material (greensand can be employed in its natural form) and the process is carried out by the introduction of brine prepared from special salt in a tank forming part of the plant. Although the lime soda process is more economical in use it suffers from the disadvantage of the production of sludge for which disposal must be arranged. Base exchange, on the other hand, does not produce any by-product.

Degree of Softening and Economies

It is generally undesirable to soften water below 4° or 5° for ordinary domestic hot water systems, because, although copper pipework is unaffected, mild steel pipes tend to become corroded and the saving of soap below 4° does not counterbalance the added cost of softening materials. Various estimates of the economics of water softening have been made both in this country and America. In the latter researches it was estimated that the softening of the hot water services of a hospital with hard water supply results in sufficient saving in soap to pay for the cost of installation and operation in less than two years. It was estimated that the neutralising action of hard water consumes about 0.07 lbs. of soap per 100 gallons per degree of hardness.

With regard to hospital laundries, research was carried out in 1939 in England and it was estimated that in laundry work 100 gallons of water of 15 degrees of hardness required 20-24 ozs. more good flake soap than water of zero hardness. (Cost of this quantity of soap at that time was about 4d. and the cost of softening the water about 1½d.) Four degrees of hardness in laundries makes softening of economic value, particularly when it is borne in mind that among other effects hard water combines with soap to produce insoluble lime soap, which adheres to fabrics and destroys their brightness.

Boiler Feed Water

Simple softening treatment for boiler feed water is not necessarily satisfactory. If water is taken from a base exchange plant and softened to zero hardness for make-up purposes it is often necessary to add to the resulting mixture of condensate return and of soft water a proportion of raw unsoftened feed water in order to prevent corrosion and pitting which are liable to occur if completely soft water is used. In some waters carbon dioxide in solution will, if a base exchange plant is used, produce a water which needs corrective chemical treatment. Lime soda plants are less likely to produce water which needs chemical treatment for boiler feed purposes.

Small Boiler Plants

Suitable treatment can be arranged for boiler feed water for small plants without using either lime soda or base exchange plants. Analyses must be made of the initial water supply and a determination made of the proportion of condensate returning to the plant, so that a combined analysis can be made for specific chemical treatment. Once the correct formula has been determined the engineer in charge can regulate the feed by taking periodic simple analyses so that he can vary the treatment depending on the rate of evaporation and the load. If the requisite quantity of the previously determined chemical compound is dissolved in a small tank, it will be found that the resulting solution can be introduced into the feed tank or hot-well by means of a simple drip feed regulated to the correct dosage. There is no danger or unpleasantness in the steam used for cooking as the treatment of the water can be made entirely non-toxic.

Regarding alkalinity of boiler water it is important that this should be kept at a low figure. Periodic tests to check alkalinity should be made. The blowing down of boilers to keep alkalinity at a reasonable point should be regular and controlled within reasonable limits in the absence of a continuous blow down system. It is often found that steam boilers are not blown as frequently as desirable to reduce alkalinity in the interests of fuel economy, but a reasonable balance should be preserved.

II—LEGAL NOTES

These notes, which have been prepared by a barrister, are intended to afford guidance on those everyday problems upon which it is not customary or, indeed necessary, to consult a lawyer and also to indicate certain other problems upon which professional advice is desirable. It cannot be too strongly emphasised that reference to notes such as these is no satisfactory alternative to taking legal advice in respect of any matter which appears likely to lead to legal proceedings or of any transaction—such as a contract to purchase land—upon which no prudent person would enter without advice.

Accounts and Finance

As regards National Health Service hospitals see particularly the National Health Service (Hospital Accounts and Financial Provisions) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1414).

Agreements

Stamp Duty—Deeds. The stamp duty on agreements made in the form of a deed varies with the subject matter. Since, however, deeds are usually executed only on the advice of solicitors the question of the appropriate stamp duty is not ordinarily the concern of the hospital administrator. The undertaking by deed most likely to be accepted by a hospital without the intervention of a solicitor is a "Seven Year Covenant." On this the stamp duty is 2s. 6d. per £100 of the total net amount receivable by the hospital.

For the stamp duty on other deeds such as conveyances, deeds of gift and the like, the reader is referred to standard text-books such as "Alpe's Stamp Acts."

Any deed for which no special duty is fixed attracts a fixed stamp duty of 10s. 0d.

Stamp Duty—Agreements under Hand. Unless a special stamp duty or scale of stamp duty is laid down for the particular subject matter, an agreement under hand (i.e. in writing, printing, etc., authenticated by signature or initials and not under seal), attracts a fixed duty of 6d. which may be denoted by ordinary postage and revenue stamps affixed and cancelled with date or signature when the agreement is made or, within fourteen days thereafter, by an impressed stamp. Certain extensions are given in respect of agreements executed abroad. Exempt from stamp duty are agreements for the sale of goods, wares or merchandise; for the hire of any labourer, manufacturer (i.e. person who makes things with his hands) or menial servant; or where the subject matter of agreement is of less value than £5.

Births in Hospital

Registration. Although in strict law the duty of registering a birth, in default of the father and mother, falls on any person present at the birth or having charge of the child, so that a doctor, midwife or nurse assisting at the delivery would be compellable to attend before the registrar to give the requisite information for registration, in practice such compulsion, if necessary, is in all ordinary circumstances exercised on the parents or other person in charge of the child.

Notification of Birth to the local health authority under s. 203 of the Public Health Act, 1936, must be distinguished from Registration (supra). The notification must be given to the Medical Officer of Health by prepaid letter or postcard within 36 hours of the birth, the duty being on the father if he resides on the premises where the birth takes place, and also on any person in attendance on the mother at the time of or within six hours of the birth. Hence, in the case of birth in hospital the duty falls on any doctor, midwife or nurse so attending at delivery or on the mother within six hours thereafter. Hospitals should have a routine procedure in the matter.

Conditions of Service—see Master and Servant.

Contracts

It is not practicable here to offer an exact treatise on the law relating to contracts. The following must be regarded, therefore, as no more than a rough guide on one or two major points of difficulty. In the event of a contract being of an unusual nature or special importance, legal advice should be sought. Some of the most common points of difficulty are dealt with in the following paragraphs.

Form or Consideration—Options. A promise, unless given in the form of a deed, is not ordinarily enforceable unless there is some consideration given for the promise. Consideration includes not only payment of money or handing over of goods but a promise to do so or even a forbearance from doing something the promiser might otherwise have done (e.g. blocking the light from a neighbour's window which had not attained the status of an "ancient light"). With most contracts there is no difficulty in showing the consideration, but difficulties do sometimes arise as regards options. The beneficiary of an option cannot compel the giver of it to keep his offer open for a particular time—even though he may have promised to do so—unless some consideration has been given for it. Hence some nominal payment for an option is always to be recommended.

Contracts which should be in writing. Various contracts such as guarantees and contracts concerning land or any interest therein, as well as any agreement not to be performed within one year, must ordinarily be in writing to be enforceable. Equitable rights arising out of part performance of a contract not in writing but which should have been are beyond our present scope. As regards contracts not to be performed within one year, it is to be observed that this would not catch, say, a contract of service which might extend beyond a year but might terminate earlier; on the other hand a contract expressed to be for a year or more fixed, even though there might be provision for earlier termination by notice or otherwise, should—to be fully legally enforceable—be in writing.

Contracts for the sale of goods of the value of £10 or upwards to be enforceable by action must be evidenced by a note or memorandum in writing and signed by or on behalf of the party against whom action is to be brought, unless (a) the buyer accepts and actually receives part of the goods so sold or (b) the buyer gives something in earnest to bind the contract or in part payment.

Capacity to Contract—Infants. Persons under 21 years of age are liable to pay a reasonable price for necessities supplied; what are necessities being a question of fact in every case, but the most obvious examples are food, clothes, medical attention, books for studies, etc.—always provided the infant is not already sufficiently supplied and the goods or services are appropriate to his condition in life. An infant who receives and pays for other goods cannot afterwards claim back the price. Reasonable contracts of service or apprenticeship beneficial to the infant are binding on him. On the other hand an infant is not liable for money borrowed by him or on any security for a loan.

Corneal Grafting—see page 986.

Deaths in Hospital

Registration. The doctor attending a patient in his last illness is under the statutory obligation of notifying the Registrar of Births and Deaths of what he believes to be the cause of the death or—alternatively—that he does not know the cause of death. He must also deliver to one of the persons obliged to give information of death a notice in statutory form of having sent in the certificate. The persons concerned are listed on the form of notice at present in use. Failing certain near relatives, the duty of giving information to the Registrar falls on members of the staff of the hospital, as acting either personally or in a representative capacity and as being in one or more of the following classes, viz. persons present at the death, the occupier of the house in which it occurred or the person causing the body to be buried. Since the Registrar's certificate or a coroner's order is requisite for lawful disposal of the remains, that, apart from the statutory time limit, exercises effective compulsion in most cases.

Disposal of Body. The classes of persons responsible in law for the disposal of a dead body is nowhere clearly laid down. It certainly includes, however, the surviving husband and also the parent of a child dying under 16 and, perhaps, under 21 years of age, though to-day that is more arguable. The executor or executors of the deceased or the administrators of his estate are also responsible, at all events so far as they have assets, funeral expenses being a first charge on such assets. But if none of these is willing to act, then the responsibility falls on the occupier of the premises where the death occurred (i.e. the hospital authority in the case of a person dying in hospital), but that person will have a claim for his reasonable disbursements on the estate of the deceased.

Moreover, under Section 50 of the National Assistance Act, 1948, it is possible that the local authorities named therein may be under an obligation to undertake disposal of the body where it appears that no suitable arrangements have been or are being made otherwise than by the authority. The advantage of the disposal being undertaken by the local authority rather than by the hospital authority lies in the right of recovery of expenses incurred not only from the estate of the deceased but, if need be, from any person legally liable to maintain the deceased immediately prior to his death.

For a statement of official policy as to burial of patients dying in hospital and circumstances in which the responsibility should be placed on the local authority, see Circular R.H.B.(49)31, H.M.C.(49)23, B.G.(49)25.

Cremation. For cremation, special formalities are requisite, including a statutory declaration and two medical certificates, leading to written authority of the appropriate medical referee. It is unlawful to cremate a body if it was known to be contrary to the wishes of the deceased. The necessary forms can normally be obtained from the undertakers.

Disposal of Property of Deceased Patient. In strict law such property should only be disposed of to or on the instructions of the personal representatives of the deceased person, i.e. his executor(s) or administrator(s), and then only on production of probate or letters of administration. In practice, however, it is suggested that it is not unreasonable to hand over to a near relative articles of clothing (other than valuable fur coats and the like) and comparatively small sums of money. This does involve a technical liability to the personal representatives but one that—within such limits—can ordinarily be disregarded. It may be desirable however to take a letter of indemnity.

If a patient who dies in hospital has left property of substantial value in the hands of the hospital authority the proper course for the hospital to take is to draw the attention of the relatives to the position and so encourage them, if there was no will, to apply for letters of administration. When substantial property, e.g. valuable jewellery, is involved, it is not safe to hand over to relatives on mere assurances that there is no will and without grant of administration.

Where there are neither known relatives within the recognised degrees of relationship nor a will, when the Crown becomes entitled to the property of the deceased as bona vacantia, the matter should be reported to the Treasury Solicitor or, if in his jurisdiction, to the Solicitor to the Duchy of Lancaster or of Cornwall. See further, Circular R.H.B.(49) 153, H.M.C.(49)130, B.G.(49)132.

Defamation—see Libel and Slander.

Detention of Patient against his Will

A patient may be detained in hospital against his will only if there is authority in law for such detention: unauthorised detention, however meritorious in its object, will lay those concerned open to an action for false imprisonment and, if involving direct use of force on the person of the plaintiff, also to an action for assault and battery. The cases in which detention is justified may be outlined as follows: mental patients detained under the provisions of the Lunacy and Mental Treatment Acts, 1890-1930; mental defectives under the Mental Deficiency Acts, 1913-1938; certain persons detained in hospital for investigation under the Criminal Justice Act, 1948; Broadmoor patients under the Criminal Lunatics Act, 1884, and the Criminal Justice Act, 1948; a person suffering from a notifiable infectious disease, but only if removed to hospital or detained there on a justice's order under the Public Health Act, 1936, or the Public Health (London) Act, 1936; a person suffering from tuberculosis of the respiratory tract in an infective state similarly removed or detained on a justice's order under the Public Health Act, 1936; in certain cases persons suffering from chronic disease or otherwise incapacitated under the National Assistance Act, 1948, S. 47. Unless a patient falls into one of the above categories, there is ordinarily no authority to detain him against his will even though dangerously ill or suffering from an infectious disease. If, however, a delirious patient in his delirium expressed a desire to leave, it is suggested that it could properly be ignored.

Disabled Persons

The provisions of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act, 1944, apply to hospital authorities as to other employers which, unless specially exempted, must employ the prescribed quota of registered disabled persons and also use registered disabled persons for prescribed types of work. Full particulars of the requirements may be obtained from any office of the Ministry of Labour and National Service, and hospitals within the National Health Service may also refer to circular R.H.B.(48)5, R.H.B.(S)(48)8, and B.G.(48)5, as may be appropriate.

Dismissal without Notice—see under Master and Servant.

Factories Acts

By virtue of s.151(9) of the Factories Act, 1937, the provisions of the Factories Acts are extended to premises in occupation of the Crown or other public or municipal authorities where various processes are carried on which, if carried on for gain, would bring the premises within the Acts. The processes which make premises a "factory" are broadly set out in s.151. Laundries are within the Act even though not carried on for gain nor by a public authority.

The safety and welfare rules are both complex and important, and there may on occasion be doubts as to what rules are applicable. It is suggested that hospitals would be well advised to consult the local factories inspector to clear up any doubts and to obtain his suggestions.

Guarantees

A guarantee, i.e. a promise to answer for the debt, default or miscarriage of another, must be in writing. It is most desirable but not essential that the consideration for the promise—and here must be consideration unless the promise be by deed—should also be reduced to writing.

Hospital Canteens and Shops

If a hospital authority provides a hospital shop or canteen whether for staff, patients or visitors there is the usual risk of an action founded either on contract or tort if anyone suffers injury because of the deleterious nature of any food or other substance sold and also, in tort, in respect of injuries due to the dangerous condition of the premises or the negligence of any member of the hospital staff. What has been said elsewhere in these notes in respect of injuries to patients and staff applies with equal force to these cases. Not only should all possible precautions be taken, but proper records of accidents should be kept. Any voluntary body controlling a hospital will be well advised to have a third party insurance wide enough to cover such contingencies.

It may also be observed that a Ministry of Health circular dated 28th November, 1951¹ authorises the control and management of hospital shops at national hospitals to be wholly or partly the responsibility of voluntary bodies. The various possible patterns of organisation offer equally various and indeterminate patterns of liability as between the hospital authority and the voluntary body concerned. The subject was discussed in The Hospital (February, 1952).²

House or Flat Occupied by Member of Staff

Effect of Rent Restriction Acts. The division between occupation by way of tenancy to which the Acts apply and occupation as a necessary incident and condition of employment may be a fine one and the decision depends on the facts of the particular case. It is, however, an important distinction, since in the former case the rent can be increased only within the limits laid down in the Acts even though an unduly low rent was charged in the first place, whereas in the latter case the valuation of the accommodation for emolument purposes can be seemingly increased without regard to any such limits.

The Rent Restriction Acts do not apply to Crown property and therefore not to hospitals and hospital property owned by the Minister of Health although managed by, say, a hospital management committee. On the other hand the Acts do apply to endowment property vested in a Board or Committee. Reference should be made to Circular R.H.B.(50)43, H.M.C.(50)42, B.G.(50)38 for outline of Ministry policy on the subject of seeking possession of houses from licensees or tenants and as to the necessary consultations.

Notice to Quit. The distinction drawn above may also be relevant to the position which arises on the resignation or dismissal of the member of the staff concerned. Ordinarily, if an officer does not give up possession on termination of his employment the only safe procedure for his eviction is an application to the County Court. Moreover, if there is any reason during the running of the notice to believe that the officer intends to remain in possession, it would be well to consult a solicitor without delay. In any event legal advice should be sought promptly on the officer holding over and no payment of rent covering any period after the termination of the employment should be accepted without legal advice so as to avoid the risk either of creating a protected tenancy, or of implicitly admitting the existence of such tenancy or, perhaps, of prejudicing any remedy against the officer which may already exist.

In the case of, say, a nurse occupying a furnished room in the nurses' home or a domestic servant occupying similar accommodation in the home for domestic staff, there would not appear to be any kind of a tenancy and the officer could ordinarily be ejected on the termination of her engagement; but see also under Master and Servant.

Illegal Operations

Any operation for procuring an abortion or resulting in intentional physical injury to the person undergoing it, being an abortion procured or an operation performed without medical need, is a criminal offence, upon conviction for which a sentence of imprisonment may be imposed and to a charge of which offence the consent of the patient is no defence. There is much argument and some confusion on the subject of artificial insemination. It is not clear that artificial insemination by a donor (i.e. by a person other than the woman's husband, usually referred to as A.I.D.) is illegal, but it is at least questionable whether pending some clarification of the law hospital staff should in the course of their duties at the hospital be parties to such procedures.

Injuries to Patients

A full exposition of the subject of the extent and circumstances of liability of a hospital authority and of its officers for injuries to patients is beyond the scope of these notes. Broadly, however, it may be said that before the appointed day under the National Health Service Act, 1946, civilian hospital authorities were liable for injuries to patients due to the negligence or incompetence of members of the staff in the course of their duties, whether professionally qualified persons like nurses and physiotherapists or other employees such as porters and domestics, and this whether the patient was or was not being treated free. There was a good deal of obscurity as to the extent of the liability of the hospital authority for the acts and omissions of doctors and some grounds for suggesting liability for negligence or incompetence of junior grades such as housemen but not of senior specialists. In the case, however, of a private patient making a separate bargain with a specialist attending him there could be no question of the hospital authority being liable for his acts and omissions. The negligent person was also himself liable to the patient or, sometimes, in the event of the patient's death, to the nearest relatives or the deceased's estate. In addition, the hospital authority was under a contractual liability to paying and often to contributory patients and a quasi-contractual liability to patients received into a local authority hospital, for certain injuries caused without negligence, e.g. supply of contaminated food leading to illness.

The position of voluntary hospitals remaining as such is still as outlined above. In the case of

National Health Service hospitals there are grounds for suggesting that they might not be liable for injuries caused by the negligence of specialist medical staff except to paying patients who pay an inclusive charge under s. 5 (1) of the National Health Service Act, 1946, but with this possible exception the authorities of these hospitals too are apparently still liable for injuries to patients to the extent outlined above. Moreover, it must be understood that the exception here suggested is by no means certain. It must also be observed that in any event the negligent or incompetent person may be held liable for injuries, loss or damage caused by his negligent acts and omissions or by the acts and omissions of those acting on his negligent or incompetent instructions.

It is rather outside the scope of these notes to deal with precautions against accidents, but it is suggested that besides taking all reasonable precautions against accidents hospitals should have an adequate reports system so that the nature and circumstances of all mishaps which might lead to a subsequent claim are duly and fully noted at the time or as soon as practicable thereafter, so that there will be no difficulty in ascertaining the facts in the event of any dispute or legal action.

Voluntary hospitals are well advised to insure against such liabilities and the obligation under most policies to advise the insurers promptly of any incident which is likely to lead to a claim must not be overlooked.

Injuries to Persons other than Patients and Staff

The provisions of common law dividing people into the categories of invitees, licensees and trespassers with corresponding, though questionable, gradations of duty towards them in respect of the safety of the premises on which they enter, for adequate treatment require discussion and analysis beyond the scope of these notes. Broadly, however, hospital authorities are well advised to act on the assumption that they are likely to be held liable to pay damages in respect of injury to anyone lawfully on the premises if such injury is due to the unsafe condition of the premises or to the negligence of any member of the staff. An example that comes to mind is a caller who slipped on a mat on a polished floor and sustained serious injury thereby, the hospital having to pay heavy damages. Incidentally, trees which are in a dangerous condition owing to insufficient care and attention, if they or branches from them fall and injure anyone on the premises or on an adjacent road or premises, may be a source of liability.

Besides taking all reasonable precautions against accidents, hospital authorities should have an adequate system of recording the nature and circumstances of mishaps including names and versions of participants and witnesses which may lead to a claim at a later date.

Jury Service—Exemption from

The obligation to accept jury service rests on all persons between the ages of 21 and 60 who own freehold land valued at £10 a year or more, or leaseholds valued at not less than £20 per annum for a period of not less than 21 years, and householders of premises the rateable value of which is not less than £30 in Middlesex or £20 elsewhere. Others liable to jury service are burgesses of certain boroughs. Persons over 60 years of age, although they may claim exemption, are not disqualified.

The above property qualification affords practical exemption from jury service to most residential staff at hospitals. Others who are exempt include practicing registered medical practitioners and superintendents and keepers of public mental hospitals. Pharmaceutical chemists (but not chemists and druggists) are also exempt, as well as any dentist who makes a claim. Midwives have now been added to the list of exemptions.

Libel and Slander

False defamatory statements in writing or other permanent or semi-permanent form, if published (i.e. communicated) to a person other than the one defamed, constitute actionable libel unless on a privileged occasion. There need be no proof of special damage to the person defamed. Similar spoken defamatory statements (slander), are actionable on proof of special damage and, even without such proof if, inter alia, touching a man's trade or profession, his conduct in or fitness for a public office or the chastity of a woman.

Certain communications, e.g. answers as a referee to a prospective employer of an employee or ex-employee of the person making or authorising the communication, are subject of qualified privilege, the effect in such cases being that a false defamatory statement which would otherwise constitute actionable libel is not so, provided made honestly and without malice. Any intention to injure the party commented on, as distinct from the intention of performing the public social duty of advising a prospective employer who seeks the information about him, defeats the plea of privilege and leaves the defendant under the onus of proving the truth of his allegation if he is to succeed in his defence. It is generally better not to volunteer adverse comments but to await a request from the prospective employer, and the answer to such enquiries, even though unequivocally adverse, should be couched of temperate language, excessive extravagance of expression possibly constituting evidence in malice. There may be occasions when it is considered expedient to refuse to give a testimonial or to answer enquiries as a referee, leaving the refusal to tell its own tale. This in itself gives no cause of action. To damn with faint praise is another expedient but it should not be resorted to when something definite is known against the employee, e.g. if he has been dishonest, since if the prospective employer were misled to his detriment he might have a cause of action against the giver of the testimonial or referee.

Qualified privilege—referred to above in respect of testimonials and references—extends also to many other communications made in performance of a legal, moral or social duty, and with the same effect. Absolute privilege covers inter alia statements made in Parliament and in the course of legal proceedings. When a statement is covered by absolute privilege the maker is absolutely protected against any action based on it, whether or not it was malicious and whether or not he knew of its falsity.

Master and Servant

In this outline of the law the word master is used in its broad legal sense as meaning any employer or employing authority, and the word servant as meaning any employed person working under a contract of service. For the purposes of some statutes referring to the Civil Service and to local government, the expression officer has been contradistinguished from servant, the former comprising employees other than manual and domestic workers established for superannuation purposes, and the latter comprising the remainder of the staff, who might or might not be established. Yet again, as in the Asylums Officers' Superannuation Act, 1909, the expression "officer or servant" is used throughout without any attempt at differentiation. Fortunately, so far as employment under the National Health Service Act, 1946, is concerned, the dichotomy is abandoned, it being expressly laid down in section 79 that "officer includes servant." So for the purposes of this outline the two expressions will be regarded as interchangeable since we shall be mainly concerned with employment under that Act. But except so far as otherwise indicated, what is said will equally apply to employment by a voluntary hospital, convalescent home or kindred institution.

Engagement. Ordinarily there is no obligation in law to reduce a contract of service to writing, unless for an initial period of upwards of one year but it is certainly desirable to do so in order to avoid all occasion for subsequent misunderstanding as to the rights and duties of the parties to it. If the agreement is reduced to writing, then it will ordinarily attract stamp duty of 6d. Contracts in the nature of apprenticeship, as of student nurses, if in writing or by deed, must be stamped 2s. 6d. Contracts of service of menial servants (e.g. domestics) and of manual workers are exempt from stamp duty.

The agreement made should cover all the normal incidents of the employment, such as the duties to be performed, hours, rate of remuneration and intervals of payment, whether and under what conditions there is pay during sick leave, also holidays and notice. To an increasing extent such matters as rates of remuneration, overtime, sick leave and holidays, for officers employed in the National Health Service, will be determined through the National Whitley Councils which have been set up for the purpose, and as regards such matters as may be covered by such national agreement it suffices in any service agreement to refer to the terms and conditions which may be laid down from time to time by the appropriate National Whitley Council for the grade in question. Matters not so dealt with and upon which agreement is necessary may either be incorporated directly in the agreement or indirectly by reference over to rules or standing orders. Except so far as national rates and conditions are embodied by reference over in a service agreement it is desirable that the person engaged should be provided with a copy of the terms and conditions, including all relevant standing orders.

Transferred officers, i.e. staff in hospital service before the appointed day, have the option of remaining subject to their pre-transfer salary scales and conditions of service as to hours, holidays, sick leave, etc., the alternative being to accept the terms and conditions laid down by the Ministry of Health for such grade in the new service, entering the new scale at a point corresponding with their previous salary or otherwise as determined by Whitley agreement. This reference to terms and conditions laid down by the Ministry is an apparent rather than a real contradiction of what has been said about settlement of conditions of service by national agreement, such scales and conditions as have been laid down unilaterally being subject to review by the appropriate National Whitley Council and it being understood that the Minister will implement agreed decisions of such Council or of arbitrators referred to in default of agreement.

Sick Leave. Unless the contract of service otherwise provides and except in the case of a person employed on an hourly basis or of a trade custom to the contrary, absence on account of sickness does not give the employer the right to stop the servant's pay or any part of it. In the hospital service the amount of sick leave on full pay and on half pay is now ordinarily laid down in national conditions of service for all grades, less, in the case of leave on full pay, the amount the officer is entitled to receive under the National Insurance Act, 1946, or the National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act, 1946, during incapacity.

Holidays. Apart from nationally agreed conditions, for certain grades entitlement to leave on Christmas Day and Good Friday, and on other public and bank holidays may be a recognised custom, but with such exceptions holidays, including annual leave, are only a right if an agreed term of the contract.

Notice. It is desirable that the notice necessary to terminate an engagement in the ordinary course, and there being no grounds for dismissal without notice, should be laid down in the original agreement, but failing such provision an engagement may be terminated by reasonable notice. What is reasonable notice is a question of fact to be determined in the light of the particular circumstances and taking account of any generally recognised custom of the trade or calling concerned, but a particular hospital or other employing authority cannot establish a custom binding on its officers, e.g. that notice must be given to expire at the end of a week or month. Any employer desiring to modify the general rule that notice may effectively be given at any time must do so by express agreement.¹

Notice : Established, pensionable officers. Unless there has been specific agreement to the contrary, any officer, whether pensionable or not and however long he may have been in his post, may have his services terminated at any time by the appropriate notice. This statement of an employing authority's strict legal rights must not be allowed to obscure the possible consequences in practice of lawful but unreasonable dismissal which may, for example, lead to a trade dispute and reference to the appeal machinery established by the National Whitley Councils for the Health Services or otherwise.

Dismissal without notice but with salary in lieu. Whenever an employing authority can lawfully terminate an officer's engagement by notice it is equally entitled to terminate it without notice on paying the dismissed officer the amount of the salary or wages he would have earned during the requisite period of notice in addition to any remuneration already due.² Apart from any agreement to the contrary a domestic servant so dismissed is not entitled to any payment in lieu of board and lodging, but in most other cases an officer dismissed with salary or wages in lieu of notice would be entitled also to the value of his emoluments for the appropriate period. The value, it is suggested, would be as fixed by agreement for purpose of superannuation. Moreover, if an officer is occupying a house or flat, quite apart from such protection as is afforded by the Rent Restriction Acts, he may be entitled to very substantial compensation if it is desired to terminate his occupation before the expiry of normal notice. It is always desirable to take legal advice before attempting to obtain possession of the accommodation otherwise than by mutual agreement.

Summary Dismissal. It is not practicable to give precise limits to the grounds which—apart from express agreement—justify summary dismissal without notice, the borderline being very indeterminate and—in a contested case—the issue normally being one of fact for the judge or jury (as the case may be) to determine. Broadly, however, it may be said that dishonesty in the course of a servant's duties, as by theft, embezzlement or the taking of bribes or secret commissions is always a valid ground; dishonesty even outside the course of his duties is usually also a ground for summary dismissal of a servant. Serious misconduct in the course of his employment is also a ground, though whether, say, any particular act of insubordination, disobedience or insolence justifies dismissal is a question of fact. Misconduct otherwise than in the course of his duties, if of a kind to make his continued employment prejudicial to his master's interests, may also justify a servant's dismissal. A servant may also be dismissed for incompetence. Illness, except in the case of temporary staff engaged for a specific emergency, is seldom a ground for summary dismissal.

²There are possible exceptions to this general rule but not of a kind ever likely to concern hospital authorities.

In general terms it may be said that employing authorities are well advised to exercise the right of summary dismissal sparingly and only in the clearest cases. Generally, even when the employer feels there is just cause of complaint, it is better to avoid the possibility of challenge at law and an adverse verdict by giving notice or salary in lieu. But when summary dismissal is justified and resorted to, the discharged servant is not strictly entitled to any payment in respect of the period which has elapsed since the last regular pay day.

If a servant is unjustly dismissed the amount of salary or wages for the appropriate period of notice and the valuation of emoluments for the same period (reserving always the subject of compensation for disturbance of occupation in certain cases already touched upon) is ordinarily the maximum damages obtained by the aggrieved employee on that account. Moreover, he is under a duty to minimise the loss by taking any suitable employment and his damages are reducible accordingly. [N.B.—This leaves aside any possibility of a right to claim damages for defamation, as to which see Libel and Slander and Testimonials and References.]

Servant leaving without notice. An officer is not entitled to leave without notice—otherwise than for just cause (e.g. the master's breach of his side of the contract)—and to discharge his obligation by payment of the amount of salary for the period of notice, but is liable to reimburse the employer the financial loss he has suffered by the servant's breach of contract. That loss may be greater or less than the salary for the period of notice and it is the employer's duty to minimise it. In practice, in any but the most exceptional cases, an action against an officer for breach of contract is hardly worth while, especially if the officer has tendered a reasonable amount as compensation (e.g. salary for the period of notice). Any just dissatisfaction with the officer's conduct is better expressed through any testimonial or reference (q.v.) called for.

Nuisance

To interfere with another person's enjoyment of his property by noise, fumes, smells, overhanging trees, etc., is a private nuisance for which damages and, if necessary, an injunction is the appropriate remedy. But the interference, to be actionable, must be substantial judged by ordinary standards and taking into account the nature of the neighbourhood. Moreover, that the occupier of the premises adversely affected uses those premises for purposes requiring, say, a more than normal freedom from noise, vibration, smells or fumes, is not allowed to increase the legal burden on his neighbours.

Trees, overhanging. Generally the only effective remedy for overhanging trees if the owner of the property on which they grow refuses or neglects to lop them on request, is fo the owner of the property adversely affected to lop them. He should not, however, cut them back beyond the boundary fence nor keep the pieces lopped off if of any significant value. Trees such as yews which are poisonous to some domestic animals, such as horses, present a special problem. Hospital authorities with such trees in their grounds should see that they are cut back sufficiently far from the boundary to prevent animals on adjoining land or highway from reaching them. It is also important if the hospital is under any obligation to repair the boundary fences or hedges that this should be duly attended to. Failing such precautions there is a serious risk of liability if an animal is injured or killed through eating the poisonous foliage.

Ancient Lights. Apart from express agreement, the right to a reasonable amount of light to a particular window is obtained only by 20 years' uninterrupted enjoyment, but since an interruption to be effective must be for a whole year, the right is in practice obtained as a result of a minimum enjoyment for 19 years and 1 day, but enforceable only after the full 20 years. This right to light, even if established, does not altogether prevent building on the adjoining land but only the erection of any structure which reduces the light enjoyed by the dominant tenement below what is reasonable, judged by ordinary standards. Hence, there can be no prescriptive right to a sufficiency of light for a particular purpose requiring more than that to which there is entitlement within the foregoing limitations. A right to enjoyment of such additional amount of light as may be necessary for a particular purpose can be acquired only by express grant. Finally, it may be noted that possession of "ancient lights" confers no right to continued enjoyment of a particular view or against the erection of structures which may be blots on the landscape. Unless these matters are covered by town planning or local building regulations or are the subject of effective restrictive covenants, it is difficult to suggest any remedy.

Nurses' Uniform

The General Nursing Council, under its statutory powers, has prescribed uniforms which may be worn by nurses on the various parts of the Register and by State Enrolled Assistant Nurses. It is an offence to wear such uniform without being entitled to do so. The Royal College of Nursing and some other voluntary bodies also authorise a uniform for their members. The wearing of such a uniform without justification and with intent to deceive would probably be actionable, and might—in some circumstances—be an offence.

Operations, Surgical Procedures, Internal and External Examinations

Ordinarily operations, surgical procedures and medical examinations should be undertaken only with the consent of the patient or in the case of a person under a disability such as infancy, mental deficiency or insanity, with the consent of his parent, guardian or other person responsible in law for his care. Infancy exists in law until the age of 21, but probably infants of 16 years and upwards may give valid consent on their own account, though the consent of the parent or guardian is desirable when it can be obtained.

If a patient whose consent to an urgent operation should be obtained is unable to give it as, for example, because unconscious as a result of illness or accident, then it is safe to proceed on the authority of the nearest relative available or, if none be available, without such consent.

In the case of a married woman in a condition to express her wishes, her husband's consent to an operation on her is not required even though the operation is one which, if performed, will possibly result in sterility, but his concurrence and co-operation on other than legal grounds are obviously desirable.

The position regarding mental patients is somewhat complex, but it is the present writer's view that in the case of a mental patient in an institution the responsibility for his mental and physical care rests on the medical superintendent, who can accordingly give the necessary consent. It is desirable, however, also to obtain the concurrence of the petitioning or nearest relative. The position is similar as regards certified mental defectives, though, in the case of defectives received into an institution at the request of parent or guardian, it is suggested that the parent's or guardian's consent to any operation be requested.

See also Illegal Operations.

Patients' Property—Loss of or Damage to

Whilst hospitals should as far as practicable disclaim responsibility for custody of patients' property, and arrange as far as possible that property of value should not be brought into hospital, it is inevitable that hospitals should take charge of patients' clothing and also, on occasion, of valuables such as money and jewellery. If liability for loss of or damage to such property is to be avoided it is desirable that there should be an adequate records system and also storage accommodation appropriate to the articles concerned. Moreover, when such property is handed back to the patient, his acknowledgment should, if possible, be obtained or other evidence of the transaction recorded.

If property of but modest value (e.g. an umbrella) is left behind by a patient and reasonable efforts to contact the patient by letter in order to hand it back prove abortive, it is usually reasonable to treat the property as abandoned and to dispose of it. That course is not, however, advisable in the case of things of greater value such as jewellery, when there might be a successful claim after the thing had been disposed of. It is by no means certain that the price obtained, had the thing already been sold by the hospital at the time of the claim, would be the measure of damages.

A hospital authority is not responsible for damage to a patient's property by fire, flood, etc., unless such damage can be attributed to the negligence of the hospital staff.

Pay Beds and Beds available on Part Payment

So far as National Health Service hospitals are concerned reference should be made to ss. 4 and 5 of the National Health Service Act, 1946, and to the National Health Service (Pay-Bed Accommodation in Hospitals, etc.) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948, No. 1490). The power of a voluntary hospital to make charges depends on its constitution and, in certain circumstances, modifications to permit charges are possible under the Voluntary Hospitals (Paying Patients) Act, 1936.

Penicillin Act, 1947

This Act puts substantially the same limitations on supply of penicillin and certain analogous substances to the public and on their use for treatment of disease as do the Dangerous Drugs Acts in respect of substances to which those Acts relate. The substances to which the 1947 Act relates are penicillin (including preparations of that substance) and such other anti-microbial organic substances as may be prescribed, and any other substance the chemical properties of which are similar to those of a prescribed substance although not produced by a living organism. At the date of writing the only additional anti-microbial organic substances included by regulation are streptomycin, aureomycin and chloramphenicol. Hospitals, clinics and nursing homes may nevertheless obtain supplies without restriction, but such supplies when obtained may be used by way of treatment only on the direction of a registered medical or dental practitioner, being supplied to patients only on prescription. Provision is also made for the supply of such substances for the purpose of scientific education and research.

Poisons and Dangerous Drugs

Poisons—Supply of by Hospitals. Public and charitable hospitals may supply medicines containing poisons within the Pharmacy and Poisons Act, 1933, on a doctor's or dentist's prescription, subject to the keeping of the prescribed records and to the following additional rules: (i) the container must bear a designation and address sufficient to identify the hospital or clinic; (ii) in the case of liniments, etc., such descriptive word, together with the words "For external use only" must appear on the label; (iii) except when a medicine is made up ready for use the label must include the word "Poison."

Poisons—Supply and Storage of in Hospitals. If in a hospital or similar institution there is a dispensing department poisons are to be supplied for use within the institution only on the written order of a doctor, a dentist, or the sister in charge of the ward or department. The container must be labelled with the name of the contents and in the case of a substance in the First Schedule to the Poisons Rules the container must bear an indication that it is to be stored in a cupboard or on a shelf reserved for the storage of poisons, and there must be such a cupboard in every ward where such poisons are kept. If there is no dispensing department, all poisons prior to issue for use within the institution are to be in charge of a person appointed for the purpose by the governing body or person in control, normally, having regard to the Dangerous Drug Regulations, the matron.

Arrangements must be made for regular inspection of places where poisons are stored.

Dangerous Drugs. Special rules as to custody and prescribing of dangerous drugs in public authority and voluntary hospitals and infirmaries are laid down in the Dangerous Drugs Regulations, 1937, as amended in 1948, 1950 and 1951. Although it is not beyond all doubt that orders for such drugs must be signed by a medical practitioner, a qualified pharmacist or—within the limits laid down in Reg. 5—by a qualified dispenser, it is clear that only those persons are ordinarily allowed to be in possession of dangerous drugs in hospital. The same regulation also makes an exception in favour of the matron of a hospital or infirmary where there is not a dispensary in charge of a qualified person, but at the same time expressly provides that she shall procure dangerous drugs only on an order signed by a medical practitioner.

The further amendment to Regulation 5 of the Dangerous Drugs Regulations, 1937, made by the Dangerous Drugs Regulations, 1950, now expressly authorises sisters or acting sisters for the time being in charge of a ward or out-patients' department in a hospital or infirmary wholly or mainly maintained by a public authority or out of public funds or by a charity or by voluntary subscriptions, so far as may be necessary for the practice of her profession, to be in possession of and to supply dangerous drugs and preparations. She must, however, obtain drugs and preparations only from the person who is responsible for dispensing in the institution and upon a signed written order of which order she must keep a copy or note. By implication of new Reg. (6a), "ward" is presumably intended to include "theatre" and, probably, other hospital departments. Further, a sister or acting sister is to supply (and the expression "supply" here must be understood to include "administer") a drug or preparation only upon the directions of a duly qualified medical practitioner in charge of any patients in the ward or, as the case may be, of the out-patients' department.

There is no definition of "sister" or "acting sister" in the regulations. "Sister", however, could only mean the person appointed as such by the hospital authority and it certainly seems implicit that it must be a S.R.N. or a nurse on other appropriate part of the Register. It would, in the opinion of the writer, include a male charge nurse of appropriate qualification appointed to the duties of a sister. "Acting sister" would presumably include any nurse expressly left in charge of the ward during the absence of the sister, although this is not clear beyond all doubt and it might be argued that the meaning of the expression was limited to nurses designated by matron or by the governing body as such. It is nowhere expressly laid down that an assistant nurse or a student nurse cannot be an acting sister, but as neither of these is a fully qualified nurse it is, to say the least, questionable whether such delegation would be permissible.

A sister or acting sister in charge of a ward or of the out-patient or other hospital departments, no less than medical practitioners and hospital pharmacists, is personally responsible for keeping dangerous drugs and preparations in her charge in a locked receptacle which can be opened only by her or by some other person authorised by virtue of Regulation 5 (supra). A ward or departmental sister should therefore always hand over the key to her authorised deputy when access to dangerous drugs may be required in her absence and always see that she gets the key back promptly on her return.

All prescriptions must be in writing, signed and dated by the doctor or dentist giving them, but an initialled entry on the patient's bed-card or case sheet suffices.

Post-Mortems

Post-mortems (or anatomical examinations or autopsies) to ascertain cause of death before issue of death certificate should be undertaken only on the instructions of the coroner, or at least with his approval. And even when the cause of death is known, there should be no post-mortem examination without the coroner's instructions or approval if the circumstances are such that an inquest is or may be necessary. The principal cases in which an inquest is necessary are when there is reasonable cause to suspect a violent or unnatural death, or when the cause of death is unknown. Deaths in prison and also—if there are suspicious circumstances—in mental hospitals, are likewise subject of an inquest, and all deaths of patients in a mental hospital have to be reported to the coroner.

Post-mortems otherwise than in coroners' cases, i.e. post-mortem examinations in pursuit of scientific knowledge, are lawful only if in accordance with the provisions of the Anatomy Acts. The principal rules are as follows:—(i) the examination may be undertaken only by a person duly licensed and at a place notified in accordance with the Acts; (ii) the permission of the person in possession of the body is essential, but on the other hand the right of the relatives is purely negative (i.e. that they can forbid dissection); (iii) a certificate of cause of death must accompany the body; (iv) removal for dissection must not take place within 48 hours of death; (v) the licensed person is under the obligation of giving various notices and making returns, and also of providing for burial within a year. The Anatomy Acts make no provision for retention of bodies or parts of bodies as specimens, though, apparently, retention of parts of the body without disfiguring it are not ordinarily made the subject of a charge, but as to Corneal Grafting see page 986.

Professional Qualifications

Professional qualifications are broadly of three kinds:

- (a) those recognised by statute as being essential to the pursuit of a particular calling, e.g. in the case of dentists and midwives, entry on the register being a prerequisite of lawful practice of dentistry or of midwifery (otherwise than by a registered medical practitioner or in case of emergency);

- (b) those recognised by statute as conferring certain privileges on the holder but not giving exclusive right to practise, e.g. registered medical practitioners and nurses recognised under the Nurses Act, 1943. In the case of registered medical practitioners the privileges in respect of possession and use of drugs and issue of many well-nigh essential certificates are so great as to secure them a virtual monopoly, whilst (apart from maternity nursing) the privilege of nurses recognised under the Act of 1943 amounts to little more than the apparently exclusive use of the title "nurse," even that privilege being subject to provisos which weaken it considerably in practice;
- (c) voluntary qualifications. The class includes all qualifications, even though conferred by an organisation established by Statute or Charter, not essential in law to the practice of the profession to which they relate, nor conferring substantial privileges in law on those in possession of them, as contrasted with persons not possessing the qualification in question. As examples of this class may be mentioned qualifications in physiotherapy, radiography, medical laboratory technology and the like though it is conceivable that in the near future radiographers having, say, the M.S.R. might be given privileges bringing them into class (a) or (b), supra.

Although it is in law most important that a person should have a qualification he is required to have by statute for a particular calling, it is in practice hardly less important that persons performing expert functions for which a voluntary qualification is appropriate should have that qualification if an employing hospital authority is to avoid excessive responsibility for injuries to patients due to incompetence, as to which see further under Injuries to Patients. It is advisable, too, not merely to ascertain that a person applying for a post for which a particular qualification is necessary or desirable possesses a certificate purporting to show that he has that qualification, but that he is in fact the person referred to in the certificate produced.

See also heads of the various professions for which there are statutory qualifications.

Chemists and Druggists—see Pharmacists

Dentists. To be entitled to practise dentistry a person must be entered on the register of dentists kept by the General Medical Council. The description "dental surgeon" is properly restricted to persons possessing the qualification awarded by certain examining bodies such as the Royal College of Surgeons of England and the corresponding examining body for Scotland, and to persons holding a university degree in dental surgery, thus distinguishing dentists holding these examination qualifications from those registered by reason of practical experience, often referred to as "1928 Dentists."

Medical practitioners. The privileges given in law to medical practitioners, e.g. in relation to the issue of prescriptions for poisons and dangerous drugs, the giving of medical certificates for various purposes, participation in the National Health Service, are confined to registered medical practitioners, i.e. persons whose names, by virtue of possessing an acceptable medical qualification, are entered on the register of medical practitioners kept by the General Medical Council. This minimum requirement, however, gives no guarantee that any practitioner is fit to undertake a particular specialty for which possession of a higher qualification and post-graduate experience may be appropriate. As to the method of appointment of medical staff of hospitals within the National Health Service see National Health Service (Appointment of Specialists) Regulations, 1950, and as to qualifications of medical practitioners taking part in the provision of supplementary ophthalmic services see the National Health Service (Supplementary Ophthalmic Service) Regulations, 1948.

Nurses. Only persons recognised as nurses under the provisions of the Nurses Act, 1943, are entitled to use the descriptive title "nurse," which, where necessary, must be accompanied by such limiting or descriptive word as "assistant" or "sick children's." But although it is an offence for a person wrongly to use the title "nurse" as applying to herself,¹ it is not an offence simply to be so addressed without having encouraged or required it.

The principal classes of nurse are as follows :
STATE REGISTERED NURSES :—

- (a) General Trained—usually referred to simply as State Registered Nurses (S.R.N.)—all general trained nurses including male nurses formerly on the part of the register for male nurses who have complied with the rules as to transfer to the general part of the register. The part for male nurses has now been abolished.
- (b) Nurses on other "parts" of the Register viz. Registered Mental Nurses (R.M.N.), Registered Nurses for Mental Defectives (R.N.M.D.), Registered Sick Children's Nurses (R.S.C.N.), Registered Fever Nurses (R.F.N.).

NURSES ON THE GENERAL NURSING COUNCIL
LIST UNDER S.18 OF THE NURSES ACT, 1943.

These are nurses who would have been entitled to State registration without examination had they applied in due time, and in respect of whom a list was opened (and is now closed) as an appendix to the Register referred to above, the list being arranged in appropriate "parts" as is the main register. It seems that "nurses" on this list have all the privileges of State Registered Nurses except as regards maternity nursing and the wearing of the prescribed uniform. Persons on the list are entitled to the description "trained nurse". If, however, she is on a particular "part" of the list, e.g. "fever", this must be indicated by the use of the description "trained fever nurse". There is now provision for transfer to the appropriate part of the Register.

STATE ENROLLED ASSISTANT NURSES (S.E.A.N.)

These are men and women who have qualified for the roll of assistant nurses kept by the General Nursing Council.

STUDENT NURSES

PUPIL ASSISTANT NURSE

Persons in training for a State Enrolled Assistant Nurse.

TRAINED NURSE

This description may be used by a person on the list kept under s.18 of the Nurses Act, 1943, and by one who has passed the examinations for the State Register but is under 21 years. If qualified, or qualified but by reason of age, otherwise than for the general part of the register or list, this must be indicated by appropriate words. Service trained nurses when out of the services may use the appropriate description such as "service trained male nurse."

MATERNITY NURSE

Subject to certain notices, State Certified Midwives and those deemed certified under Defence Regulations may use the description "maternity nurse."

Provision is also made for the appropriate description to be used by persons who have or are training for certain other nursing qualifications, such as the certificate of the Tuberculosis Association, the Royal Medico-Psychological Association, and the like. In addition, provision is made for reciprocal recognition of nursing qualifications awarded abroad.

Pharmacists. Members of the Pharmaceutical Society are entitled to the privilege in law of undertaking responsibility for the dispensing of poisons and dangerous drugs. This is broadly true in hospitals as well as elsewhere, though exceptionally, institutions with a dispenser holding the Apothecaries' Hall qualification or the appropriate R.A.M.C. qualification may be given individual exemption from compliance with the general requirements of the Dangerous Drugs Act, but see further under Dangerous Drugs, also Poisons, Penicillin Act, 1947, and Radioactive Substances Act, 1948.

All members of the Pharmaceutical Society are entitled to the designation "pharmacist," but within that general designation there is a subdivision into "chemists and druggists" (persons who have taken the ordinary standard examination of the Society) and "pharmaceutical chemists" or "pharmaceutists" (persons who have taken the more exacting examination leading to that qualification). In law there is no distinction between the privileges of "pharmaceutical chemists" and "chemists and druggists." Also it must be appreciated that with the increasing provision of courses in pharmacy leading to a university degree (B.Pharm.), students taking that degree may not bother to do more to obtain their formal

Radioactive Substances Act, 1948

As from an appointed day yet to be fixed at the time of writing (August, 1952), this Act provides for a strict control of the manufacture, supply and use of radioactive substances and the use of irradiating apparatus for therapeutic purposes.

Substantially, so far as supply of radioactive substances and their use for treatment of human beings is concerned, the Act provides for control on the lines of the Dangerous Drugs Acts. As under these Acts, hospitals, clinics and nursing homes will be able to obtain supplies, which may, however, be used for treatment of patients only by or under the direction of a medical practitioner or dentist duly licensed for the purpose. There is also power reserved in the Act to exempt other persons or classes of persons from the provisions of the Act and it may be that this power will in due course be used to permit properly trained technicians and nurses to use on or administer such substances to patients on the instruction of qualified medical or dental practitioners, but not under their immediate direction. It is difficult at this stage and before any regulations or orders have been issued to say more on the subject.

The use of irradiating apparatus (which may be a wider term than X-ray apparatus) for treatment of human beings is, from the appointed day, restricted to qualified medical and dental practitioners duly licensed for the purpose, or to persons acting in accordance with the instructions of such a practitioner. Use of irradiating apparatus for diagnosis as distinct from treatment is not directly restricted by the Act, but may be brought within its terms by regulation.

The Act also provides for the making of safety regulations in respect of occupations involving radioactive substances and irradiating apparatus and for powers of entry and inspection. Premises which are mainly residential can be entered and inspected without permission of the occupier only on a justice's warrant. In our view hospitals are residential premises, but the question is open to discussion.

Receipts

Ordinarily, receipts for amounts of £2 and upwards should bear a twopenny unappropriated inland revenue stamp, which may take the form of a postage stamp or stamps to that value provided they are properly cancelled with the date or the signature of the person giving the receipt. Whenever a receipt, if given, would attract stamp duty it is an offence to refuse or neglect to give a receipt on demand.

Stamp Duty—Exemptions. Receipts given by hospital authorities established under the National Health Service Act, 1946, or the National Health Service (Scotland) Act, 1947, viz. Regional Hospital Boards, Boards of Governors of teaching hospitals, Hospital Management Committees and Boards of Management, are exempt from Stamp Duty under the first schedule of the Stamp Act, 1891, provided such receipts are given in respect of moneys for which the hospital authority is accountable to the Exchequer (e.g. payments made by paying or part-paying patients under ss. 4 and 5 of the 1946 Act). But receipts for moneys constituting endowments or income of endowments (e.g. rent of land constituting an endowment) are not exempt from stamp duty. Although there is no legal authority for it, exemption is in practice also conceded to receipts for charitable gifts, though if the payer or donor demands a properly stamped receipt it should be given.

Also exempt from stamp duty under the first schedule of the Stamp Act, 1891, are officers' receipts given to their employing authority for salaries, wages and expenses, and the view of the Ministry of Health is that this exemption extends to receipts given by members of hospital authorities and their committees for payments in respect of travelling expenses, subsistence allowance and loss of remunerative time.

Voluntary hospitals enjoy no exemption in respect of stamps on receipts they may give otherwise than the practical exemption of receipts for voluntary donations. Receipts given by their staff for salaries, wages and expenses fall within the exemption mentioned in the last paragraph.

Cheques. Cheques issued by Regional Hospital Boards, Boards of Governors of teaching hospitals, Hospital Management Committees and Boards of Governors, are not exempt from Stamp Duty and must bear a twopenny unappropriated Inland Revenue stamp.

Search—see under Theft

Shop Acts

Any hospital which carries on a retail trade or business, e.g. shop where staff or patients can supply their needs, must comply with the conditions as to hours, staff conditions, etc., as laid down in the Acts and the regulations and orders made thereunder.

Staff Reports

Staff reports are subject of qualified privilege so that if they are made without malice, in the legal sense of the word, and are not published to any but the person or persons entitled to receive them, they do not constitute actionable libel or slander even if false and defamatory. Whether it is reasonable to communicate a report to a typist for typing depends on the circumstances. Also, care should be taken not to leave an adverse report where it might be seen by unauthorised persons. If the maker of an adverse report entitled to qualified privilege takes proper precautions against its undue disclosure, as by handing to the proper person or transmitting it under cover marked "confidential", but the person receiving it improperly communicates it to someone not entitled to receive the information, or leaves it about so that it is seen by such unauthorised person the original maker will be protected against a successful action for defamation, but the careless recipient responsible for the improper disclosure may be mulcted of damages: whether the employing authority would also be liable would depend on the circumstances of the case.

See further Libel and Slander—especially as to “qualified privilege” and “malice”.

Testimonials and References

There is no obligation on an employer to give an employee or ex-employee a testimonial, or to answer enquiries about him, but to refuse a testimonial or the customary facility for reference is oppressive except where justified by the dishonesty or grave misconduct of the person concerned. Provided an employer or ex-employer or an officer of an employing or ex-employing authority states honestly and on proper occasion what he believes to be the truth concerning the ability and character of the person to whom the testimonial or reference relates neither the employer nor the officer giving the testimonial or answering as referee is liable in damages even though defamatory statements made are false. But if the false defamatory statements are made otherwise than on a proper occasion and to a person properly interested (such as a prospective employer) there is no protection from an action for libel or slander. The necessary communication to subordinates, e.g. to a shorthand-typist, is also privileged, but not excessively wide publication as, for example, by putting the answer to an inquiry in the wrong envelope. See also under Libel and Slander.

Theft

Prosecution. Theft in hospital, whether by staff, patients, or callers, is a troublesome problem. If the culprit is discovered, the evidence being beyond all reasonable doubt, the problem reduces itself to one of policy rather than law. The hospital authority is under no obligation to prosecute¹ though it must not make an agreement with the thief not to do so on condition that he hands back or assists in recovery of the stolen property, for this would be compounding a felony. However, provided no such agreement is made, the hospital may properly take the thief's subsequent restitution or help in recovery into account in reaching a decision. If a hospital does decide to prosecute, the costs of the prosecution will fall on the hospital authority. But the hospital authority cannot prevent the police prosecuting if the case has come to their notice and they consider it appropriate to do so. Then of course, the prosecution will not be at the expense of the hospital authority.

Search. If there are thefts which have not been brought home to a particular person though there is someone suspect, it is important that the greatest care should be exercised not to publish unfounded charges. If a course of wrongdoing is suspected the best plan is probably to report the known facts to the police, and any reasonable suspicions and the basis therefor, and invite their co-operation. But it may be that there are grave suspicions that a particular employee, or possibly a patient, is taking stolen goods off the premises and it may be desired to catch him redhanded. Then the idea of a search is very attractive, but the attraction must usually be resisted since hospital authorities have no greater right of search without warrant than any private person, and should anyone be wrongfully detained and searched, there being no stolen goods found on him, the hospital authority and its officers concerned would probably be mulcted of heavy damages. Moreover, any false defamatory statement uttered as alleged justification for the search might itself constitute a separate actionable wrong. Some employers do make it a condition of employment that employees will submit to search when required to do so, but even if a hospital authority made such condition and the employee, in the event, refused to submit to search, it is doubtful whether he could be compelled to do so. Probably in the circumstances the refusal would itself constitute a ground for dismissal without notice and that is all.

Arrest. If a theft or embezzlement is discovered, an officer of the hospital authority acting on its behalf may detain the wrongdoer, or any person reasonably suspected, but only for so long as is reasonably necessary to charge him and hand him over to the police. Although a recent House of Lords decision appears to uphold the right of the person making the arrest to take the suspect before a senior officer for him to decide whether he should be charged, such procedure seems to increase the risk of an action for wrongful arrest and false imprisonment in any case where the senior officer decides the evidence is insufficient and orders release. Also it might be a factor in increasing damages when the charge is persisted in but subsequently, after acquittal of the defendant, found by a civil jury not to be based on sufficient grounds to justify arrest.

Trees—see Nuisance

Trespassers

A trespasser is a person, without the express or implied permission of the occupier and without lawful justification or excuse, on premises (such as a hospital or private house and including the grounds) in occupation of another. Such a person may be ordered off the premises by the occupier or his servant or agent and, if he refuses to go, may be removed with the exercise of such reasonable force as is necessary. Excessive force in removing a trespasser, or any personal assault on him not reasonably necessary in self defence, will give the trespasser a cause of action for damages. Similarly, it is not permissible to set a trap to injure unwary trespassers and liability will be incurred if anyone is injured thereby. If a trespasser refuses to leave when asked to do so and resists or threatens to resist removal, it is wise, where practicable, to seek the co-operation of the police.

¹ For formal completeness it may be observed that if goods stolen have been sold in market overt they can generally be recovered only if the thief has been prosecuted to conviction.

Truck Acts

It is generally forbidden by the Truck Acts to pay manual labourers other than domestic and menial servants, in kind, though deduction from wages of the real value of meals supplied on the premises is permitted if there is an agreement in writing to that effect. Deduction of fines either by written agreement or in accordance with a conspicuous notice is also permitted.

The scope of the exception as to domestic and menial servants has caused some uncertainty from time to time. In one case, a voluntary hospital engineer-stoker was held to be within the exception. It cannot, however, be assumed that the decision in that case would necessarily be followed if the defendant were a hospital taken over by the Ministry of Health.

Uranium Parts

These are now supplied to hospitals only on hire and are subject to the relevant provisions of the Atomic Energy Act, 1946. (vide Ministry circular R.H.B.(50) 11; H.M.C.(50) 11; B.G.(50) 10.)

Young Persons, Employment of

The hours and conditions of work of young persons in certain employments, such as collection and delivery of goods, and as outside messengers, are governed by the Young Persons (Employment) Act, 1939. There are also provisions for the protection of young persons in the Factories Acts and—though not so likely to affect hospitals—in the Education Act, 1944. This is a subject on which it is well to seek the advice of the local factory inspector.

Corneal Grafting

Corneal grafting using corneas of deceased persons is now authorised within the limits laid down in the Corneal Grafting Act, 1952. The Act was passed too late for fuller treatment here, but readers are referred to Ministry of Health Circular R.H.B. (52) 77, H.M.C. (52) 70, B.G. (52) 74 and to an article which appeared in The Hospital, August 1952 at page 601.

47/889	The National Health Service (Executive Councils) Regs., 1947.	15.5.47	The Regulations provide for the appointment and term of office of members of Executive Councils and for the procedure of the Councils. They also provide for the setting up of an Ophthalmic Services Committee in the area of each Executive Council and prescribe the qualifications to be held by doctors and ophthalmic and dispensing opticians who participate in those Services.
47/930	The National Health Service (Monmouthshire and Newport) Executive Council Order, 1947.	26.4.47	The Order constitutes a single Executive Council for the County Council of Monmouthshire and the County Borough of Newport.
47/983	The National Health Service (Appointed Day) Order, 1947.	1.7.47	The Order brings into force on 1st July, 1947, certain provisions of the National Health Service Act, 1946, of which the most important is S. 49, transferring to the Minister some of the Administrative functions of the Board of Control. It also brings into force various amendments of the Acts relating to mental treatment and mental deficiency.
47/1180	The National Health Service (Denbighshire and Flintshire) Executive Council Order, 1947.	28.5.47	The Order constitutes a single Executive Council for the County Councils of Denbighshire and Flintshire.
47/1297	The National Health Service (Constitution of Regional Hospital Boards) Order, 1947.	24.6.47	The Order names the original Chairmen and Members of the fourteen Regional Hospital Boards for England and Wales.
47/1298	The National Health Service (Regional Hospital Boards, etc.) Regs., 1947.	24.6.47	The Regulations provide for the appointment and term of office of Members of Regional Hospital Boards, Hospital Management Committees and Boards of Governors of Teaching Hospitals and for the proceedings of their meetings.
47/1330	The National Health Service (Travelling Allowances, etc.) Regs., 1947.	26.6.47	The Regulations provide for payments for loss of remunerative time, travelling expenses and subsistence allowances to members of hospital authorities and Executive Councils.
47/1359	The National Health Service (Mental Deficiency) Amendment Regs., 1947.	1.7.47	The Regulations make such amendment of the Mental Deficiency Regulations, 1935, as is required by reason of the transfer of functions from the Board of Control to the Minister of Health by Part V of the National Health Service Act, 1946.
47/1360	The National Health Service (Mental Treatment) Amendment Rules, 1947.	1.7.47	The Rules make such amendment of the Mental Treatment Rules, 1930, as is required by reason of the transfer of functions from the Board of Control to the Minister of Health by Part V of the National Health Service Act, 1946.
47/1775	The National Health Service (Superannuation) Regs., 1947.	5.7.48	The Regulations provide for the establishment of a contributory superannuation scheme for:— <ul style="list-style-type: none">(a) officers and servants of Regional Hospital Boards, Executive Councils and other bodies constituted under the National Health Service Act, 1946;(b) general medical practitioners and general dental practitioners on the list of Executive Councils; and(c) other persons engaged in health services, whether provided under the Act or otherwise. The scheme which is administered by the Minister of Health, is financed by contributions from the participants in its benefits and by contributions

Number	Title	Operative Date	Subject
			made out of Exchequer moneys. The scheme is not funded but is subjected to actuarial investigation periodically. The scheme is designed to provide benefits comparable with those applicable in the case of an established civil servant under the Superannuation Acts, 1918–1946. The major benefits are a pension and a lump sum retiring allowance, together with a widow's pension. Subsidiary benefits include a death gratuity, an incapacity pension, an injury allowance, a short service gratuity and an option to a pensioner to allocate part of his pension to his wife or any dependant. Provision is made for preserving the rights in respect of previous superannuable service of persons who become participants in the scheme on being transferred under the Act of 1946 to the central health service. In addition, superannuable employment in the central health service is made interchangeable with superannuable service in the Civil Service, the Local Government Service and the Teaching Service. The scheme also extends and modifies the Local Government Superannuation Act, 1937, in its application to local health authorities and other superannuation schemes administered by local health authorities under local Acts by substituting benefits similar to those provided by the Regulations for the benefits of the Act of 1937 or those local Act schemes in relation to superannuable employees on the medical and nursing staff of the local health authorities and to any other classes of superannuable employees designated by the Minister. Similar provision is made in relation to the superannuable staff employed by local education authorities for the purposes of the school health service.
48/60	The National Health Service (Functions of Regional Hospital Boards, etc.) Regs., 1948.	21.1.48	The Regulations prescribe the duties to be performed by Regional Hospital Boards, Hospital Management Committees and Boards of Governors of Teaching Hospitals, in the administration of the hospital and specialist services so far as those duties are not specifically imposed by the National Health Service Act, 1946.
48/112	The National Health Service (Appointed Day) Order, 1948.	5.7.48	The Order fixed the "appointed day" for the National Health Service Act, 1946, other than those sections brought into operation by Statutory Rules and Orders, 1947, No. 983 (see above) at 5th July, 1948.
48/167	The Isles of Scilly (National Health Service) Order, 1948.	30.1.48	The Order extends to the Isles of Scilly the provisions of the National Health Service Act, 1946, subject to certain modifications. It revokes the earlier Isles of Scilly (National Health Service) Order, 1946, which applied part only of the Act to the Isles.
48/419	The National Health Service (Superintendents of Mental Hospitals, etc.) Regs., 1948.	1.5.48	The Regulations provide for the appointment of a Superintendent for each mental hospital or mental deficiency institution, and define the powers of such officer.
48/441	The National Health Service (Executive Council for the Isles of Scilly) Regs., 1948.	1.4.48	The Regulations make provisions with respect to the appointment and term of office of members and staff of the Executive Council for the Isles of Scilly and with respect to the procedure of the Council.
48/505	The National Health Service (General Dental Services) Regs., 1948.	24.3.48	The Regulations provide for the arrangements which Executive Councils are required to make under Part IV of the National Health Service Act, 1946, for the provision of general dental services. Provision is also made for the constitution of the Dental Estimates Board.
48/506	The National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Regs., 1948.	24.3.48	The Regulations provide for the arrangements to be made by Executive Councils under Part IV of the National Health Service Act, 1946, with medical practitioners and chemists for the provision of a general medical practitioner Service (including a maternity medical service) and the supply of drugs, medicines and appliances. The terms of service for general medical practitioners and chemists are included as schedules to the Regulations. The Regulations further provide for the setting up of the Medical Practices Committee, its constitution and its procedure for determining applications for medical practitioners for inclusion in a medical list and prescribe the form of certificate to be issued to medical practitioners under section 35 (9) of the Act that a transaction does not involve the sale of goodwill.

Number	Title	Operative Date	Subject
48/507	The National Health Service (Services Committees and Tribunal) Regs., 1948.	24.3.48	The Regulations provide for disciplinary matters and the determination of disputes arising in connection with the provision of general medical and dental services and pharmaceutical services under Part IV of the National Health Service Act, 1946. Provision is made for the constitution by an Executive Council of service committees, for their investigation of complaints and for the action which may be taken against practitioners on such complaints. In certain cases it is provided that disputes may be referred to Local Medical or Dental Committees. The Regulations include provisions governing the procedure before the Council, the Service Committees, and the Local Medical and Dental Committees, and for appeals against the decisions of these bodies. The Regulations further prescribe the procedure to be followed in the hearing of representations for the removal of a practitioner or chemist from a list under S. 42 of the Act.
48/567	The National Health Service (Transfer of Local Authority Functions) Regs., 1948.	1.4.48	The Regulations provide for the transfer of functions from local authorities to local health authorities, particularly in respect of property and sundry liabilities.
48/575	The National Health Service (Central Health Services Council and Standing Advisory Committees) Regs., 1948.	1.4.48	The Regulations prescribe the periods for which members of the Central Health Services Council and of Standing Advisory Committees are to be appointed.
48/656	The National Health Service (Designation of Teaching Hospitals (No. 1)) Order, 1948.	24.3.48	The Order designates hospitals and groups of hospitals outside the Metropolitan area as teaching hospitals.
48/888	The National Health Service (Apportionment and Transfer) Regs., 1948.	1.5.48	The Regulations provide for the apportionment and vesting of interests in premises used partly for hospital purposes and partly for other purposes and of property which, if held solely for the purposes of a single voluntary hospital, would constitute an "endowment" of that hospital; for the apportionment of rents and other periodical payments payable in respect of transferred property; and for the apportionment of liabilities incurred partly for hospital purposes and partly for other purposes. Provision is also made for the control and management of apportionable premises pending apportionment. The Regulations also provide for the transfer to the Minister of Health of interests in premises and of liabilities held or incurred for the purposes of two or more voluntary hospitals. Part V of the regulations contains provisions supplementary to or consequential on the transfer and apportionment of property and liabilities including a provision for arbitration in respect of disputed transfers.
48/979	The National Health Service (Designation of Teaching Hospitals (No. 2)) Order, 1948.	7.5.48	The Order designates hospitals and groups of hospitals within the Metropolitan area as teaching hospitals.
48/1075	The National Health Service (Emergency Mental Treatment) Regs., 1948.	5.7.48	The Regulations contain provisions for safeguarding the welfare of persons alleged to be of unsound mind, who for their protection or the public safety, are removed to hospitals designated for the purpose pending the taking of further proceedings for their reception into mental hospitals.
48/1156	The National Health Service (Executive Councils) Amendment Regs., 1948.	3.6.48	The Regulations amend the National Health Service (Executive Councils) Regulations, 1947 (S.R. & O., 1947, No. 889) by inserting further provisions as to the retirement of members, provision for validating the acts of an Ophthalmic Services Committee notwithstanding a defect in its membership and further provisions with respect to the qualifications to be held by persons and companies providing supplementary ophthalmic services.
48/1237	The National Health Service (Transfer of Property and Liabilities of Insurance Committees, etc.) Regs., 1948.	20.6.48	The Regulations make provision in accordance with section 69 (2) of the National Health Service Act, 1946, for the transfer of the property and liabilities of Insurance Committees to Executive Councils and of the Dental Benefit Council and the Ophthalmic Benefit Approved Committee to the Minister.
48/1239	The National Health Service (Executive Councils and Dental Estimates Board) Financial Regs., 1948.	1.7.48	The Regulations lay down the financial procedure to be followed by the Executive Councils and the Dental Estimates Board in the exercise of their functions under Part IV of the National Health Service Act, 1946. The Regulations further provide for the form of accounts to be kept by the

Number	Title	Operative Date	Subject
			Councils and the Board, for the accounts to be furnished by them to the Minister and for the audit of these accounts.
48/1273	The National Health Service (Supplementary Ophthalmic Services) Regs., 1948.	5.7.48	The Regulations provide for the arrangements which Executive Councils through Ophthalmic Services Committees are required to make under Part IV of the National Health Service Act, 1946, for the provision of Supplementary Ophthalmic services.
48/1292	The National Health Service (Dissolved Authorities) Regs., 1948.	21.6.48	The Regulations provide for the winding up of bodies dissolved by section 78 of the National Health Service Act, 1946, and for the vesting of their property and liabilities in the appropriate authorities.
48/1297	The National Health Service (General Dental Services) Fees Regs., 1948.	5.7.48	The Regulations provide for the fees and remuneration which are to be paid to dental practitioners practising elsewhere than at a health centre for the provision of general dental services. The Regulations also prescribe the charges payable by persons in respect of the supply, replacement, or repair of dental appliances of a more expensive type than the standard type and in respect of special dental treatment.
48/1301	The National Health Service (Joint Pricing Committee for England) Order, 1948.	14.6.48	The Order provides for the constitution of a Joint Committee to carry out the duties of the Executive Councils of England with respect to the checking and pricing of the prescriptions for drugs, medicines and appliances supplied as pharmaceutical services under S. 38 of the National Health Service Act, 1946.
48/1413	The National Health Service (Expenses in Attending Hospitals) Regs., 1948.	5.7.48	These Regulations provide for the payment in certain circumstances of travelling expenses of persons attending hospitals and clinics for the purpose of obtaining hospital and specialist services.
48/1414	The National Health Service (Hospital Accounts and Financial Provisions) Regs., 1948.	5.7.48	The Regulations provide for the submission of estimates of income and expenditure by Regional Hospital Boards, Hospital Management Committees and Boards of Governors of Teaching Hospitals and for their approval by the Minister of Health, for the accountancy methods to be used and for incidental matters.
48/1415	The National Health Service (Qualifications of Health Visitors and Tuberculosis Visitors) Regs., 1948.	5.7.48	The Regulations prescribe the qualifications to be held by health visitors and tuberculosis visitors employed by local health authorities or employed by voluntary organisations under arrangement with local health authorities. Power is taken to dispense with the requirements of the regulations in order to enable persons now employed as visitors to continue to serve until the supply of fully qualified visitors becomes adequate.
48/1416	The National Health Service (Appointment of Specialists) Regs., 1948.	29.6.48	The Regulations make provision with respect to the appointment of certain classes of medical and dental officers to the Hospital and Specialist Services. They require the advertising of posts to be filled and provide for the setting up of Advisory Appointments Committees to select and submit to the appointing body the names of the suitable applicants.
48/1448	The National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Amendment Regs., 1948.	5.7.48	These Regulations amend the National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations, 1948, for two main purposes: first to extend the arrangements for maternity medical services to enable payment to be made to a woman's own doctor to provide her with maternity medical services notwithstanding that he is not possessed of qualifications recognised by the Local Obstetric Committee, and secondly, to enable a doctor to claim to be paid partly by a fixed annual payment of £300 at his option, subject to the Executive Council agreeing or, on appeal, the Minister.
48/1474	The National Health Service (Superannuation) (Amendment) Regs., 1948.	1.7.48	These Regulations amend the National Health Service (Superannuation) Regulations, 1947. They correct certain anomalies in the principal regulations and make various drafting and minor amendments. In addition the regulations confer additional rights on persons subject to the provisions of the principal regulations and extend those regulations to additional classes of persons.
48/1475	The National Health Service (Transfer of Officers and Compensation) Regs., 1948.	5.7.48	These Regulations provide for the transfer to Regional Hospital Boards of officers employed at hospitals which are transferred to the Minister under the National Health Service Act, 1946, and for the transfer of officers employed by bodies from whom functions are transferred by that Act to the appropriate authority. The Regulations also provide the machinery for compensating persons losing employment or remuneration as a result of the transfer of functions under the National Health Service Act, 1946.

48/1483	The National Health Service (Superannuation) (England and Scotland) Regs., 1948.	30.6.48	The Minister of Health has made regulations under subsection (1) of S. 67 of the National Health Service Act, 1946, providing superannuation benefits for persons employed in the central health service and in local health authority service. The Secretary of State has made similar provision as respects Scotland under subsection (1) of S. 66 of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act, 1947. These Regulations provide for interchangeability of service with preservation of superannuation rights between the English and Scottish health services, and between either of those services and the Local Government Service and the Teaching Service in Great Britain. Consequential provision is made for the payment of transfer values, etc., to and by the Minister of Health, the Secretary of State and the other authorities concerned.
48/1488	The National Health Service (Welsh Joint Pricing Committee) Order, 1948.	3.7.48	The Order provides for the constitution of a Joint Committee to carry out the duties of the Executive Councils in Wales with respect to the checking and pricing of the prescriptions for drugs, medicines and appliances supplied as pharmaceutical services under S. 38 of the National Health Service Act, 1946.
48/1489	The National Health Service (Control and Management of Hospital Endowment Fund) Regs., 1948.	5.7.48	These Regulations provide for the control and management of the Hospital Endowment Fund by the Minister of Health and enable the Minister to appropriate for hospital purposes any land belonging to the Fund on payment to the Fund of an appropriate sum by way of compensation. The Regulations also enable the Comptroller and Assistant Comptroller of the National Debt Office to act on the Minister's behalf in realising securities belonging to the Fund.
48/1490	The National Health Service (Pay-Bed Accommodation in Hospitals, etc.) Regs., 1948.	5.7.48	These Regulations prescribe the charges to be made for accommodation in hospitals consisting of single rooms or small wards and the charges to be made for special accommodation in hospitals provided for patients who undertake to pay charges designed to cover the whole cost of the accommodation and services provided by the hospital. The Regulations also limit the fees which may be charged by medical practitioners to their private patients in such special accommodation.
48/1505	The National Health Service (Charges for Appliances) Regs., 1948.	5.7.48	These Regulations provide for the recovery by the Minister of Health of charges for the supply of glasses, dentures and artificial limbs of a more costly kind than those ordinarily supplied under the hospital and specialist services and in respect of the repair of such articles. The regulations also provide for the recovery of the cost of replacing or repairing appliances which have been lost or damaged through carelessness.
48/1506	The National Health Service (Medical Practices Compensation) Regs., 1948.	5.7.48	The Regulations make provision for a medical practitioner whose name is included on the appointed day in the medical list of an Executive Council to claim compensation for the loss of the right to sell the goodwill of his practice.
48/1507	The National Health Service (General Dental Services) Fees (Amendment) Regs., 1948.	5.7.48	The Regulations amend the National Health Service (General Dental Services) Fees Regulations, 1948, by adding provisions for the remuneration of dental practitioners practising at health centres.
48/1579	The National Health Service (Designation of Teaching Hospitals—Cambridge Hospitals) Order, 1948.	6.7.48	The Order provides for the inclusion of the Chesterton Hospital, Cambridge (a former poor law institution) in the Cambridge teaching hospitals group.
48/1920	The National Health Service (Designation of Teaching Hospitals—The Bethlem Royal Hospital and The Maudsley Hospital) Order, 1948.	17.8.48	The Order provides for an alteration in the designation of the teaching hospital to which it relates.
48/2517	The National Health Service (Venereal Diseases) Regs., 1948.	1.12.48	The effect of these Regulations is to maintain the principle, originally contained in the Public Health (Venereal Diseases) Regulations, 1916, which it was necessary to revoke in consequence of the

Number	Title	Operative Date	Subject
			National Health Service Act, 1946, that information about persons attending venereal disease treatment centres (which are covered by the term "hospital") shall be treated as confidential.
48/2803	The National Health Service (General Dental Services) Fees (Amendment No. 2) Regs., 1948.	1.2.49	The Regulations amend the National Health Service (General Dental Services) Fees Regulations, 1948, by providing for a reduction of the fees payable to dental practitioners when the fees payable under those Regulations exceed a rate of £400 a month. The amount of the reduction is one half the fees in excess of that figure.
49/48	The National Health Service (General Dental Services) Fees Regs., 1949.	1.2.49	These Regulations remove certain drafting defects from the National Health Service (General Dental Services) Fees (Amendment No. 2) Regulations, 1948.
49/482	The National Health Service (Apportionment of Hospital Endowment Fund) Regs., 1949.	23.3.49	The Regulations provide that, after the discharge out of the Hospital Endowment Fund of certain liabilities transferred to the Minister of Health by the National Health Service Act, 1946, the balance of the Fund shall be apportioned between Regional Hospital Boards and Hospital Management Committees by reference to the number of beds in the hospitals which they control. The income of the Fund is to be distributed to the Boards and Committees proportionately to their shares.
49/564	The National Health Service (General Dental Services) Amendment Regs., 1949.	1.4.49	These regulations amend the existing regulations relating to the general dental services, and in particular provide for the use by dentists of a simplified estimate form in the case of certain kinds of emergency treatment. The regulations also make provision with respect to the choice of dentists for persons in approved schools, and make some minor amendments of the provisions of the existing regulations respecting the fees payable to dentists and other matters.
49/577	The National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Amendment Regs., 1949.	31.3.49	These regulations amend The National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations, 1948, by making in respect of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1949, special provisions for the remuneration of doctors, by providing for the choice of a doctor or chemist on behalf of persons detained in an Approved School, and by making sundry minor amendments to those Regulations.
49/578	The National Health Service (Local Health Authorities) Estimation of Expenditure Regs., 1949.	31.3.49	These regulations prescribe the method of estimating the expenditure incurred by local health authorities on which Exchequer grant is payable.
49/955	The National Health Service (General Dental Services) Amendment (No. 2) Regs., 1949.	1.6.49	These regulations prescribe a fresh scale of fees for general dental services in substitution for the scale previously in operation, and provide for the discontinuance of regulations under which dentists' remuneration is cut if it exceeds a specified monthly sum.
49/1120	The National Health Service (Executive Councils) Amendment Regulations, 1949.	20.6.49	Provide for the appointment of a deputy where a professional member of an Ophthalmic Services Committee is unable to take part in proceedings relating to the investigation of a complaint against a doctor or optician providing Supplementary Ophthalmic Services.
49/1248	The National Health Service (Medical Practices Compensation) Amendment Regulations, 1949	4.7.49	Amend the provisions of the National Health Service (Medical Practices Compensation) Regulations, 1948, with respect to the payment of interest on compensation payable under those regulations. Until the amount of compensation has been notified to the claimant or his personal representative, payments in respect of interest are to be calculated and paid on a provisional basis, any under-payment or over-payment being subsequently adjusted.
49/1467	The National Health Service (Superannuation) (Amendment) Regulations, 1949.	29.7.49	Make drafting and minor amendments in the regulations in force under S. 67 (i) of the National Health Service Act, 1946, with a view further to securing the intention of the principal regulations and to removing anomalies in the operation of those regulations, as previously amended. The regulations also provide additional benefits for officers who are subject to the regulations and for their widows.
49/2340	The National Health Service (Travelling Allowances, etc.) Regulations, 1949.	16.12.49	Revoke the National Health Service (Travelling Allowances, etc.) Regulations, 1947. The regulations make provision for the payment to members of Regional Hospital Boards, Boards of Governors of teaching hospitals, Hospital Management Committees, Executive Councils, Central Health Services Council and Standing Advisory Committees and any committees of these bodies of allowances in respect of loss of earnings and additional expenses including travelling and subsistence expenses. The regulations further make provision for the payment of remuneration and travelling and subsistence expenses to members of the Tribunal, the Medical Practices Committee and the Dental Estimates Board.

49/2341	The National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Amendment (No. 2) Regulations, 1949.	*	Amend the National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations, 1948, in the following respects:— (i) by amending the procedure for filling vacancies on the Medical List where the Executive Council declare a practice vacant; (ii) by amending the procedure for securing the provision of general medical services to the patients of a doctor who has died or retired from the medical list; (iii) by prescribing the medical certificates which a doctor is required to provide free of charge to his patients or their personal representatives as part of general medical services; (iv) by amending the provisions relating to the employment of medical assistants; (v) by permitting doctors to order certain drugs in bulk for their patients residing at schools and institutions; and (vi) by restricting persons providing pharmaceutical services from advertising otherwise than in an approved manner, in connection with their work under the National Health Service.
49/2398	The National Health Service The Manchester Royal Infirmary (Cheadle Royal Hospital) Order, 1949.	23.12.49	Amends certain provisions of two private Acts which are inconsistent with the provisions of the National Health Service Act, 1946. The name and constitution of the corporate body known as the Manchester Royal Infirmary became inappropriate by reason of the fact that the hospital of that name was transferred to the Minister of Health and that the Corporation was left in possession of a hospital situated at Cheadle and other property used in connection therewith.
49/2447	The National Health Service (Executive Councils) Amendment (No. 2) Regulations, 1949.	2.1.50	Enable an Executive Council to appoint its own chairman in accordance with the amendments to the Fifth Schedule to the National Health Service Act, 1946, provided for in the Schedule to the National Health Service (Amendment) Act, 1949. The regulations further provide for the tenure of office of the first additional member of a Council to be appointed by the Minister of Health under the above provisions.
50/161	The National Health Service (Designation of Teaching Hospitals—King's College Hospital) Order, 1950.	30.1.50	Made for the purpose of excluding a convalescent home from the group of hospitals designated as a teaching hospital by the name of King's College Hospital, and of including another home in that group.
50/353	The National Health Service (Designation of Teaching Hospitals—University College Hospital and the Eastman Dental Hospital) Order, 1950.	1.4.50	Made for the purpose of including the Jordan Hospitals Reigate, formerly the Reigate (Whitebushes) Isolation Hospital in the group of hospital, designated as University College Hospital, and of providing that the Eastman Dental Clinic be redesignated as the Eastman Dental Hospital.
50/354	The National Health Service (Welsh Joint Pricing Committee (Amendment) Order, 1950.	6.3.50	Provides that the Welsh Joint Pricing Committee shall be able to purchase land subject to the consent of the Minister of Health for the purpose of carrying out its duties.
50/395	The National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Amendment Regulations, 1950.	23.3.50	Extend to the year ending the 31st March, 1950, the special provision previously made in respect of the preceding year for the remuneration of doctors.
50/438	The National Health Service (Hospital Endowments Fund—Discharge of Liabilities) Regulations, 1950.	27.3.50	Empower the Minister to use the assets of the Hospital Endowments Fund to meet the liabilities transferred to him from non-teaching voluntary hospitals, but require not less than £20,000,000 to be retained in the Fund.

50/486	The National Health Service (Joint Pricing Committee for England) (Amendment) Order, 1950.	29.3.50	Provides that after article 3 of the National Health Service (Joint Pricing Committee for England) Order, 1948(c), there shall be inserted the following article:— “ 3a. The Committee shall be a body corporate with perpetual succession and a common seal and with power to hold land without licence in mortmain: Provided that the Committee shall not acquire land without the consent of the Minister.”
50/497	The National Health Service (Superannuation) Regulations, 1950.	1.4.50	These regulations revoke, with a few exceptions, the regulations in force under S. 67 (1) of the National Health Service Act, 1946, and reproduce their provisions with necessary drafting alterations and certain minor alterations, mainly of an administrative character.
50/528	The National Health Service (Designation of Teaching Hospitals — St. Thomas's Hospital) Order, 1950.	1.4.50	Excludes the Roffey Park Rehabilitation Centre from the group of hospitals known as St. Thomas's Hospital.
50/600	The National Health Service (Authorisation of Subscriptions) Regulations, 1950.	1.5.50	Provide that where a Regional Hospital Board, a Board of Governors of a teaching hospital, or a Hospital Management Committee, wish to make a subscription to an association, they may do so provided that the Minister of Health approves not only the objects of the association but also the amount of the subscription they propose to make.
50/663	The National Health Service (General Dental Services) Fees (Amendment) Regulations, 1950.	1.5.50	Provide for a deduction of ten per cent. from the fees payable by Executive Councils to dentists, so far as the fees relate to work undertaken on or after the 1st May, 1950.
50/983	The National Health Service (Service Committees and Tribunal) Amendment Regulations, 1950.	1.7.50	Make minor alterations to the National Health Service (Service Committees and Tribunal) Regulations, 1948. They enable, inter alia , an Executive Council to establish with the consent of the Minister of Health two or more medical service committees, dental service committees or pharmaceutical service committees. They also provide that a deputy or assistant to a practitioner on the medical or dental list of an Executive Council or a registered pharmacist employed by a chemist on the pharmaceutical list shall on application be treated as if he were a party to any service committee proceedings which concern his conduct. Other alterations are mainly for the purpose of clarification.
50/1222	The National Health Service (Expenses in attending Hospitals) Regulations, 1950.	1.9.50	Revoke the National Health Service (Expenses in attending Hospitals) Regulations, 1948, under which it was the duty of hospital authorities to determine whether travelling expenses incurred in attending hospital should be paid by the Minister, and they provide that such determination shall be made under arrangements made by the Minister.
50/1224	The National Health Service (Emergency Mental Treatment) Amendment Regulations, 1950.	1.11.50	Amend the National Health Service (Emergency Treatment) Regulations, 1948, by bringing the notice of death required by those regulations to be sent to the Coroner into conformity with the death certificate in general use.
50/1247	The National Health Service (Apportionment of Hospital Endowment Fund) Amendment Regulations, 1950.	1.8.50	Amend the method of payment to Regional Hospital Boards and Hospital Management Committees of their respective shares of the income produced by the Hospital Endowments Fund. The regulations also provide for the method of adjusting the shares of Boards and Committees in the capital value of the Fund where the grouping of a hospital or the area of a Regional Hospital Board is altered.
50/1259	The National Health Service (Appointment of Specialists) Regulations, 1950.	1.9.50	Revoke the existing regulations prescribing the procedure to be followed in making certain hospital appointments. They re-define the classes of medical and dental officers with respect to whose appointment the special procedure is to be followed and make fresh provision with respect to the constitution of the Advisory Appointments Committees which are to be set up for the purpose of selection.
50/1260	The National Health Service (Functions of Regional Hospital Boards, etc.) (Amendment) Regulations, 1950.	1.9.50	Extend the classes of hospital officers, the appointment and dismissal of whom is to be exercised by Regional Hospital Boards and not by Hospital Management Committees.

50/1276	The National Health Service (Supplementary Ophthalmic Services) Amendment Regulations, 1950.	14.8.50	Amend the National Health Service (Supplementary Ophthalmic Services) Regulations, 1948:— (i) by providing that the statement of fees payable by an Executive Council for optical appliances supplied, shall include a scale of charges for both standard and special-type appliances; (ii) by enabling an Ophthalmic Services Committee to reduce or waive any charge imposed for the replacement or repair of optical appliances occasioned by lack of care, where the payment would cause undue hardship upon the person against whom the charge is imposed; (iii) by prohibiting opticians from offering any financial inducement to persons in respect of the provision of Supplementary Ophthalmic Services; and (iv) by enabling persons whose glasses were prescribed more than two years previously to have their glasses replaced or repaired in certain circumstances without a further test of sight.
50/1296	The National Health Service (Designation of Teaching Hospitals—St. George's Hospital, King's College Hospital, and St. Thomas's Hospital) Order, 1950.	1.8.50	This order is made for the purpose of excluding the Princess Beatrice Hospital from a group of hospitals designated as a teaching hospital under the name of St. George's Hospital, and for providing for the transfer of the officers employed at the Princess Beatrice Hospital, and for the transfer of endowments specifically relating thereto. Minor amendments are also made to the names of two other hospitals.
50/1486	The National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Amendment (No. 2) Regulations, 1950.	*	Make sundry minor amendments to the National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations, 1948, mainly relating to the provision of pharmaceutical services. In addition they provide that a person already on the list of a doctor except where he changes his address may only transfer to another doctor with the consent of the doctor on whose list his name is included or after a short waiting period.
50/1682	The National Health Service (General Dental Services) Amendment Regulations, 1950.	1.11.50	Enable a dentist to give certain services of an urgent kind without incurring the duty to carry out all the treatment necessary to secure dental fitness. They amend the list of drugs which may be prescribed for persons receiving general dental services, and they also amend the rules regarding the materials which dentists may use in providing such services.
50/1744	The National Health Service (Medical Practices Compensation) Amendment Regulations, 1950.	1.11.50	Make further provision for the assessment of compensation payable to members of medical partnerships for the loss of the right to sell their practices. The regulations also extend the time within which claims for compensation may be made and make certain other amendments in the existing regulations.
50/1835	The Isles of Scilly (National Health Service) Order, 1950.	13.11.50	Amends the Constitution of the Executive Council for the Isles of Scilly and provides for the application to the Isles of the provisions, with certain exceptions, of the National Health Service (Amendment) Act, 1949.
50/1836	The National Health Service (Executive Council for the Isles of Scilly) Amendments Regulations, 1950.	15.11.50	The provisions are mainly consequential on an Order made by the Minister providing for the election of the Chairman of the Executive Council of the Isles of Scilly. Hitherto he has been appointed by the Minister.
50/2092	The National Health Service (Supplementary Ophthalmic Services) Amendment (No. 2) Regulations, 1950.	1.2.51	Amend the National Health Service (Supplementary Ophthalmic Services) Regulations, 1948, by providing that, where an ophthalmic medical practitioner or an ophthalmic optician has, after testing the sight of a person caused an excessive cost to the service by prescribing additional lenses or glasses to those which are necessarily required by the person, the Minister may direct, after an investigation in the manner prescribed in the regulations, that such sum as he thinks fit shall be deducted from the remuneration of the practitioner or optician concerned.
51/479	The National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Amendment Regulations, 1951.	21.3.51	Extend to the year ending the 31st March, 1951, the special provision previously made in respect of the preceding year for the remuneration of doctors.

51/482	The National Health Service (Local Health Authorities) Estimation of Expenditure (Amendment) Regulations, 1951.	31.3.51	Make minor adjustments in the method of estimating the expenditure incurred by local health authorities on which Exchequer grant is payable.
51/507	The National Health Service (Travelling Allowances, etc.) Amendment Regulations, 1951.	1.4.51	Alter the existing regulations which prescribe the allowances to be made to the members of certain bodies constituted under the National Health Service Act, 1946, for the use of their motor cars on official business.
51/843	The National Health Service (Charges for Appliances) Regulations, 1951.	21.5.51	Make provision for the making and recovery of charges under the National Health Service Act, 1951, in respect of the supply of dentures and spectacles by hospitals.
51/867	The National Health Service (General Dental and Supplementary Ophthalmic Services) Regulations, 1951.	21.5.51	Provide for the manner in which the appropriate charges, fixed by the National Health Service Act, 1951, as payable, in respect of the supply of dentures and glasses, by persons supplied with such appliances under Part IV of the National Health Service Act, 1946, shall be made and recovered. The regulations further provide for the consequential reduction in the charges payable by Executive Councils to dentists and opticians for the supply of such appliances.
51/1006	The Isles of Scilly (National Health Service) Order, 1951.	10.5.51	Extends the National Health Service Act, 1951, to the Isles of Scilly.
51/1161	The National Health Service (Superannuation) (Amendment) (No. 1) Regulations, 1951.	2.7.51	Under the National Health Service (Superannuation) Regulations, 1950, which are the regulations at present in force under section 67 (1) of the National Health Service Act, 1946, the remuneration of a dental practitioner for pension purposes is the sum of the payments made to him by Executive Councils in respect of his provision of general dental services. Now that pursuant to section 1 of the National Health Service Act, 1951, these practitioners will be entitled to obtain part of their remuneration for some of their services from their patients instead of from Executive Councils, it is necessary to ensure that that part of their remuneration shall also be reckonable for pension purposes. These regulations are designed to secure that result.
51/1373	The National Health Service (Remuneration and Conditions of Service) Regulations, 1951.	13.8.51	Provide for the determination of the remuneration or other conditions of service of officers employed by hospital authorities in the National Health Service.
51/1695	The National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Amendment No. 2 Regulations, 1951	1.10.51	Amend the National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations, 1948, in the following respects:— (i) by amending the provisions relating to the allocation scheme; (ii) by providing for additional circumstances in which the name of a person may be removed from the list of a medical practitioner; (iii) by amending the provisions relating to the duties of medical practitioners under their terms of service; (iv) by amending the provisions relating to the acceptance of fees by medical practitioners. In addition there are made certain minor or consequential amendments.
51/1696	The National Health Service (Executive Councils) Amendment Regulations, 1951.	1.11.51	Amend the National Health Service (Executive Councils) Regulations, 1947 by prescribing fresh qualifications for medical practitioners providing supplementary ophthalmic services under section 41 of the National Health Service Act, 1946. Nothing in these regulations affects the position of practitioners who are already providing such services.
51/2001	The National Health Service (General Dental Services) Amendment Regulations, 1951.	1.12.51	Prescribe a fresh dental estimate form for use by dentists engaged in General Dental Services. This form will take the place of the two estimate forms now in use. Consequential amendments of the existing regulations are made. The regulations also enable a dentist to make arrangements with a medical practitioner to treat patients on his behalf for the arrest of bleeding. The regulations make additions to the list of drugs which may be prescribed by dentists, and also make some slight alteration of the provisions regarding fees for the examination of persons under 21 years of age.

51/2220	The National Health Service (Designation of Teaching Hospitals—St. Peter's and St. Paul's Hospitals) Order, 1951.	1.1.52	This Order adds Sheffield Street Hospital (which will, in future, be called St. Philip's Hospital) to the group of hospitals designated as a teaching hospital under the name of St. Peter's and St. Paul's Hospitals. The Order also provides for the transfer of part of the capital assets of the Hospital Endowments Fund to the Board of Governors of the teaching hospital.
52/419	The National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Amendment Regulations, 1952.	7.3.52	Extend to the year ending the 31st March, 1952, the special provision previously made in respect of the preceding year for the remuneration of doctors.
52/666	The National Health Service (Travelling Allowances, etc.) Regulations, 1952.	1.4.52	Consolidate with amendments the existing regulations relating to the payment of travelling allowances, etc., to members of bodies set up under the National Health Service Acts. In particular they increase the allowances previously payable in respect of the use of motor cars.
52/694	The National Health Service (Designation of Teaching Hospitals — Charing Cross Hospital) Order, 1952.	1.4.52	Made for the purpose of including the Kingsbury Maternity Hospital in the group of hospitals designated as a teaching hospital under the name of Charing Cross Hospital and providing for the transfer of the officers employed at the Kingsbury Maternity Hospital and for the transfer of endowments specifically relating thereto.

		(48) 15	Covers and explains the provisions of the National Health Service (Dissolved Authorities) Regs., 1948.
		(48) 16	Cancelled before circulation.
		(48) 17	The purpose of this Memorandum is to give regional hospital boards, hospital management committees and boards of governors of teaching hospitals an outline of the scheme of post-graduate education in operation since the end of the war for the benefit of medical officers released from the Forces, and to make some indications about the future of the scheme.
		(48) 18	Cancelled by B.G. (48) 68.
(48) 38 (48) 38A (48) 38B	(48) 21; 21a, 21b, 21c, 21d, 21e	(48) 18a, 18b, 18c, 18d, 18e	Deal with medical and surgical appliances which may be supplied to participants in the National Health Service, and contain lists of firms with whom contracts have been made. (Cancelled by R.H.B. (49) 82, H.M.C. (49) 67, B.G. (49) 68.)
(48) 37	(48) 22	(48) 19	Tells hospital authorities what alterations in procedure are to be made in consequence of the absorption of the emergency hospital scheme in the National Health Service.
(48) 39	(48) 23	(48) 20	Outlines arrangements made with the Board of Trade for hospital management committees and boards of governors of teaching hospitals to exercise the same statutory powers in the matter of textile rationing as were already exercised by local authorities. (Cancelled by R.H.B. (50) 51, H.M.C. (50) 50, B.G. (50) 45.)
		(48) 21	Explains the issue of the National Health Service (Superannuation) Regs. (S.R. & O. 1755/47), and the "Code of Procedure for Employing Authorities."
(48) 40	(48) 24	(48) 22	Draws the attention of hospital authorities to points arising from the National Assistance Act, 1948, these being, in particular, the classification of the sick and non-sick, medical work in mixed institutions, property of patients, and casuals.
(48) 41	(48) 25	(48) 23	Explains the vesting and use of endowment and other "free" moneys by hospitals in the National Health Service.
(48) 41a	(48) 25a	(48) 23a	Places beyond doubt that appeals for funds by hospitals in the National Health Service are not to be made, whilst at the same time emphasising that gifts from independent bodies, individuals and groups of supporters may be accepted and that other forms of voluntary effort are not to be discouraged.
(48) 42			Deals with the transfer of officers to the National Health Service, and with the scheme of compensation devised for officers suffering loss of employment or reduction in pay.
	(48) 26	(48) 24	Deals with statistical returns to be made by hospital authorities.
	(48) 27	(48) 25	Draws the attention of hospital management committees and boards of governors to the contents of Ministry of Health Circular 116/48, dealing with the rating of hospitals.
(48) 44	(48) 28	(48) 26	Gives instructions to the effect that hospital staffs for whom no guidance as to salaries and conditions of service is given are to be paid according to scales and rates prescribed by present negotiating machinery or, in the absence of such machinery, those which have in fact been paid in the hospital. It draws attention to the option open to officers in accordance with para. 11 of H.M.C. (48) 2 to retain existing salaries where these are better than those prescribed by any recognised joint negotiating machinery.

R.H.B.	H.M.C.	B.G.	General Scope
(48) 43	(48) 29	(48) 27	Deals with the supply, repair and maintenance of dental appliances, charges for dentures of a more expensive type, and the assistance of regional dental officers of the Ministry.
		(48) 28	Deals with the provision of Medresco hearing aids through hospitals.
		(48) 28a	See R.H.B. (48) 6A.
	(48) 30	(48) 29	Deals with the licensing and insurance of hospital vehicles which are transferred to the Minister under S. 6 of the National Health Service Act, 1946 and the supply of petrol for use in these vehicles and for members of hospital management committees and boards of governors of teaching hospitals for use in their own cars.
(48) 45	(48) 31	(48) 30	Brings to the notice of hospital authorities the immediate effect of the introduction of the National Health Service on arrangements for the prescription and dispensing of glasses. It deals with such matters as types of glasses available, methods of dispensing, replacement and repair, and artificial eyes.

(49) 17		(49) 13	Refers to the co-operation of the hospital services of the armed forces and of the National Health Service.
(49) 18	(49) 11	(49) 14	Deals with the increased demand for X-ray films and steps being taken to meet it, and enjoins stringent economy in the use of films by radiological departments.
(49) 19	(49) 12	(49) 15	Asks hospital authorities to continue to make arrangements for the medical examination of sick and disabled persons referred by the Ministry of National Insurance and the Ministry of Labour and National Service.
(49) 20		(49) 16	Requests information of the extent to which regional hospital boards and boards of governors are developing a domiciliary specialist service.
(49) 21	(49) 13		The attention of hospital management committees is drawn to the fact that provision of educational facilities for voluntary patients was made lawful by reason of the amendment of the Education Act, 1944, by the 1st Schedule to the Education (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1948.
(49) 22	(49) 14		Draws attention to the procedure for identifying persons not liable to be called up for service on grounds of being mental patients or mental defectives (paragraph 3 of First Schedule to National Health Service Act, 1946).
(49) 23	(49) 15	(49) 17	Announces the agreement reached in the Administrative and Clerical Staffs Whitley Council on equal pay for men and women administrative officers, and a revision of certain of the salary scales for clerical and administrative staffs in Scotland. (A.C. Circular No. 1.)
(49) 24	(49) 16	(49) 18	Is concerned with the extension of provisional contracts of hospital medical and dental staff, pending the settlement with the profession of final terms of remuneration and conditions of service in light of the recommendations of the Spens Committee on the remuneration of consultants and specialists.
(49) 25	(49) 17	(49) 19	Stresses the importance of professional officers not being excluded from meetings of management or house committees at which matters in which they are concerned are under discussion.
(49) 26	(49) 18	(49) 20	Gives information about decisions of the Nurses' and Midwives' Whitley Council on remuneration of male ex-service student nurses, intensive course students, and other consequential matters.
(49) 27	(49) 19	(49) 21	Deals with the transfer of patients to hospitals in Eire.

R.H.B.	H.M.C.	B.G.	General Scope
(49) 28	(49) 20	(49) 22	Is concerned with the custody of patients' property and pocket money, etc., for patients.
(49) 29	(49) 21	(49) 23	Gives further information about the organisation of the hospital eye service and points out that the detailed establishment suggested in paragraph 4 of H.M.C. (48) 63 was intended to be no more than a broad general indication of the composition of the team of the eye department, and that the ophthalmic surgeon will almost always need the additional help of clinical assistants.
(49) 30	(49) 22	(49) 24	Explains conditions under which railway fares can be granted for visitors to patients at hospitals dealing with long stay cases (e.g. , mental hospitals, mental deficiency institutions, sanatoria).

			empowering the Executive Council if, by excessive prescribing, the ophthalmic medical practitioner or the ophthalmic optician has caused an excessive cost to the Service to withhold from him, subject to appeal to the Secretary of State, such sum as the Executive Council think fit; and (2) empowering the Secretary of State, failing action by the Committee and the Council and after an examination of ophthalmic prescriptions, to issue to the Executive Council a direction to withhold from an ophthalmic medical practitioner or an ophthalmic optician who, by excessive prescribing, has caused an excessive cost to the Service, such sum as he may decide.
51/353 S. 15	The National Health Service (Joint Ophthalmic Services Committees) (Scotland) Amendment (No. 2) Order, 1951.	1.3.51	Amends the National Health Service (Joint Ophthalmic Services Committees) (Scotland) Order, 1948, by (1) providing for the retirement of one-third of the members of a Joint Ophthalmic Services Committee at the end of each year; (2) providing for the appointment of a deputy to act for a member of a Committee if necessary to ensure the presence of a quorum; and (3) empowering a Committee to delegate to a sub-committee its duty to investigate complaints against ophthalmic medical practitioners and opticians.
51/524 S. 24	The National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) (Scotland) Amendment Regulations, 1951.	*	Make three minor amendments of the National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) (Scotland) Regulations, 1948 (as amended by subsequent amending Regulations). First, the period within which a person may intimate to the Executive Council that he does not wish to be transferred to the list of the doctor who has taken over the practice of his former doctor is fixed at one month; second, the special provision made in respect of the preceding year for the distribution among doctors of the sums available for their remuneration is extended to the financial year ending 31st March, 1951; third, new lists of appliances and chemical reagents, which include certain additions and amendments, are substituted for the former lists.
51/733 S. 37	The National Health Service (Travelling Allowances, etc.) (Scotland) Amendment Regulations, 1951.	1.5.51	Alter the existing regulations which prescribe the allowances to be made to the members of certain bodies constituted under the National Health Service (Scotland) Act, 1947, for the use of their motor cars on official business.
51/825 S. 48	The National Health Service (Local Health Authorities) Estimation of Expenditure (Scotland) Amendment Regulations, 1951.	10.5.51	See note on S.I. 1951, No. 482.
51/844 S. 49	The National Health Service (Appointment of Boards of Management — Consequential Provisions) (Scotland) Order, 1951.	1.6.51	In terms of a revised scheme for the appointment of Boards of Management submitted by the North-Eastern Regional Hospital Board, Scotland, and approved by the Secretary of State under section 11 of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act, 1947, the Board of Management for the Central Aberdeenshire Hospitals is dissolved on 31st May, 1951, and the hospitals previously managed by it come under the management of other Boards: the Turriff Cottage Hospital and the Fyvie Cottage Hospital come under the management of the Board of Management for the West Aberdeenshire Hospitals, and the Inverurie Infectious Diseases Hospital under the management of the Board of Management for the Aberdeen Special Hospitals. The Order makes provision in accordance with section 11 (10) of the Act, for the transfer of rights and liabilities of the dissolved Board, including rights and liabilities arising from contracts for the rendering of services, and for the transfer of the endowment funds of the dissolved Board.
51/861 S. 50	The National Health Service (General Dental and Supplementary Ophthalmic Services) (Scotland) Regulations, 1951.	21.5.51	Provide for the manner in which the appropriate charges fixed by the National Health Service Act, 1951, as payable in respect of the supply of dentures and glasses by the person supplied with such appliances under Part IV of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act, 1947, shall be made and recovered. The regulations further provide for the consequential reduction of the fees payable by Executive Councils to dentists and opticians for the supply of such appliances.

51/862 S. 51	The National Health Service (Charges for Appliances) (Scotland) Regulations, 1951.	21.5.51	Make provision for the making and recovery of charges under the National Health Service Act, 1951, in respect of the supply of dentures and glasses as part of the hospital and specialist services in Scotland.
51/1147 S. 61	The National Health Service (Scotland) (Superannuation) Amendment Regulations, 1951.	2.7.51	Under the National Health Service (Scotland) (Superannuation) Regulations, 1950, which are the regulations at present in force under s. 66 (1) of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act, 1947, the remuneration of a dental practitioner for pension purposes is the sum of the payments made to him by Executive Councils in respect of his provision of general dental services. Now that in terms of section 1 of the National Health Service Act, 1951, these practitioners will be entitled to obtain part of their remuneration for some of their services from their patients instead of from Executive Councils, it is necessary to ensure that that part of their remuneration shall also be reckonable for pension purposes. These regulations are designed to secure that result.
51/1464 S. 75	The National Health Service (Local Health Authority Charges) (Scotland) Amendment Regulations, 1951.	10.8.51	The National Health Service (Local Health Authority Charges) (Scotland) Regulations, 1948, specify a number of services for which, where provided by a local health authority, as part of their arrangements for the care of mothers and young children, the authority may make a charge to the recipient if they so determine. The present Regulations add to that list the provision of special transport services to clinics, e.g. , a specially hired 'bus' and also, as authorised by the National Health Service (Amendment) Act, 1949, the provision of residential accommodation, e.g. , in residential nurseries.

51/1763 S. 87	The National Health Service (Qualifications for Supplementary Ophthalmic Services) (Scotland) Amendment Regulations, 1951.	1.11.51	Amend the National Health Service (Qualifications for Supplementary Ophthalmic Services) (Scotland) Regulations, 1948, by prescribing fresh qualifications for medical practitioners providing supplementary ophthalmic services under section 42 of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act. Nothing in these regulations affects the position of practitioners who are already providing such services.
51/1765 S. 90	The National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) (Scotland) (Amendment No. 2) Regulations, 1951.	8.10.51	Amend the National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) (Scotland) Regulations, 1948, by enabling an Executive Council to remove from doctors' lists, after due notice to the doctor, persons whose addresses cannot be traced; by enabling doctors to receive fees from dentists for administering anaesthetic or arresting bleeding, in the case of the doctor's own patients; and by making sundry minor amendments in the said Regulations.
51/2057 S. 100	The National Health Service (General Dental Services) (Scotland) Amendment Regulations, 1951.	1.12.51	Enable a dentist to make arrangements with a medical practitioner to treat patients on his behalf for the arrest of bleeding. They also extend the Rules of Procedure, prescribed in the Fourth Schedule to the National Health Service (General Dental Services) (Scotland) Regulations, 1948, to cases referred by the Scottish Dental Estimates Board for investigation by a Dental Service Committee.

REPORT OF THE INTER-DEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE ON MEDICAL SCHOOLS

(The Goodenough Report)

(Published 20th July, 1944)

General Objectives

The aim of undergraduate medical education must be to guide medical students to such development of mind and character as will enable them when qualified to give maximum service to the community. To this end the student's training should provide a university education on broad and liberal lines, scientific in character with the stress on principles and methods, with bias as to subjects according to the needs of the future general practitioner.

Unit of Organisation

The unit of undergraduate teaching should be the medical teaching centre consisting of a university medical school, a group of teaching hospitals (parent and associated) and appropriate clinics of the local health service. Each medical school should be a separate legal entity in association with a university, the three extramural schools in Scotland being abolished.

While the governing body of each constituent institution of a teaching centre retains full authority in its own field of responsibility, the policy, administration and activities of the constituent parts should be so interrelated that the institutions function as one in the field of medical education and research. To this end it is suggested (a) that the medical school should be represented on the governing bodies of parent and associated teaching hospitals and vice versa, (b) an exchange of representatives between parent and associated hospitals should be encouraged, (c) a joint advisory body should be established to advise on all medical staff appointments other than to university chairs, readerships, etc., in respect of which there should be consultation with the hospital, (d) all persons who teach medical students whether at parent or associated hospital to be on staff of medical school, (e) a proportion of the medical staff to hold appointments at more than one hospital.

Administrative Pattern

The parent hospital must have a governing body personal to the hospital. If it is a local authority hospital this would involve appointment by the local authority of a separate committee of management for that hospital, having the widest possible discretion in the expenditure of its budget and not tied rigidly to detailed allocations, determined by the local authority.

The full members of the medical staff of any teaching hospital should have complete individual responsibility for the clinical management of their patients. The advice sought by the governing body on medical matters should be that of the medical staff as a whole, expressed through a medical committee. If there is a medical superintendent he should not have executive powers in respect of the clinical management of patients, except in so far as such powers are delegated to him on the advice of the medical staff of the hospital.

Facilities for Clinical Instruction

As an optimum, schools with an entry of 100 students a year are recommended having access to 950-1,000 hospital beds and to out-patient departments, laboratories and clinics. Local authority hospitals for infectious and for mental diseases must be included and as a rule the inclusion of one or more local authority general hospitals as full partners will be very beneficial in securing a comprehensive range of teaching resources.

The group of teaching hospitals associated with a medical school must include at least one parent teaching hospital which forms the focus of the arrangements for clinical instruction. The admission of patients to it must be selective and controlled in the interests of teaching.

Staff in Clinical Departments, including Pathology

The following changes are considered necessary to remedy the defects inherent in the present system, (a) the creation of more whole-time appointments in all grades, senior, intermediate and junior, (b) the adoption of new machinery for the selection of clinical teachers and members of the staffs of teaching hospitals, coupled with arrangements to minimise "in-breeding", (c) the payment of salaries to clinical teachers in respect of defined duties, (d) the reorganisation of the educational work of the clinical departments on the basis of at least each clinical division having an academic head.

Remuneration of Clinical Teachers

If it becomes the practice to pay the medical staffs of hospitals, part-time teachers should be paid a joint salary for the dual appointment, being greater than that paid to a non-teaching clinician of corresponding status. Except in the case of professorial and similar university appointments, the medical school and the other constituent parts of the teaching centre should consult in fixing joint salaries and proportion to be paid by each.

Staff Required

No common pattern suggested, but for bedside-teaching, no teacher should be responsible for more than six to eight students.

There should be an adequate staff of non-medical technical assistants, for whose recruitment and training the universities should accept responsibility and for whom there should be a national scale of salaries and superannuation.

Women Students

Co-education should be the rule, and grants from public funds should be conditional on acceptance of a reasonable proportion of women students. There should be no sex bar in the making of hospital appointments.

Selection and Financial Assistance

Selection should not be merely on examination results. There should be an interview and consideration of confidential reports on previous career.

Grants to students should be adequate, no suitable secondary school pupil being prevented by lack of means from studying medicine.

Pre-Medical and Pre-Clinical Students

Detailed proposals are made under these heads affecting staffing and curriculum both of secondary schools and university colleges. Generally in London pre-clinical training should be provided at the medical school.

Pathology

The better staffing of pathological divisions with a professor at the head of each of the four departments is suggested. Students should be well-grounded in fundamentals, but not be expected to acquire detailed knowledge or technical skill.

General Clinical Instructions—Medicine, Surgery, and Obstetrics and Gynaecology

Six chapters are devoted to this, the keynote being that the bulk of students should be trained as family doctors, and more attention should therefore be paid to general medicine, minor ailments, early stages of disease, chronic and infectious diseases, and rehabilitation. There should be adequate training in midwifery and gynaecology. In surgery the technical details of operative measures are matters of post-graduate study; undergraduates should learn general principles and the treatment of those conditions commonly met in general practice.

The recommendation is made that at teaching hospitals medical students should have the first claim on midwifery cases, pupil midwives being accepted only if there is a surplus. Otherwise they should train at non-teaching hospitals.

Psychiatry

Whether he is dealing with problems of health or sickness, a medical practitioner cannot fully understand his patients or advise and treat them adequately unless he pays due attention to their psychological background. The training in psychiatry has failed to keep pace with the growing realisation of the important place which the subject should occupy in medical thought and practice. In future, every medical teaching centre must have an active department of psychiatry, the work and teaching of which are related to the work and teaching of the other departments.

Detailed proposals are made to this end, including the linking up of the mental hospitals with the work of the teaching centres.

Compulsory Pre-Registration House Appointments

After passing the final qualifying examination and before being allowed to enter independent medical practice, every medical student should be required to serve as a junior house officer for a period of twelve months in one or more approved hospitals.

General Medical Council

The Council should employ inspectors to visit medical teaching centres and report on courses of study, staffing, accommodation, equipment, arrangements and facilities for undergraduate medical education, the inspectors' reports and comments of the Council and of the institutions concerned being communicated to the University Grants Committee.

Final Examinations

The Universities of London, Oxford and Cambridge should reconsider the standard of their final examination and should introduce some "internal" features. Every medical school should provide a single organised course based upon university requirements which it should be compulsory for the student to complete before presenting himself for examination.

Curriculum

A drastic overhaul of the medical curriculum is an urgent necessity, and its accomplishment might be made a condition to be satisfied before any increase is made in Exchequer grant in aid of undergraduate medical education.

Post-Graduate Medical Education and Research

The five chapters devoted to these subjects are too detailed to be effectively summarised here, but it may be said that serious dissatisfaction is expressed with the present position and suggestion made for the determination of qualification and standards of specialist status by suitable central machinery, the primary requisite being approved specialist post-graduate training after satisfactory general clinical experience in hospital appointments. The position with regard to the award of existing post-graduate diplomas, except the M.R.C.P. and the F.R.C.S., are generally regarded as unsatisfactory.

Development of research work through the Medical Research Council, the medical schools, teaching hospitals and post-graduate institutes, is proposed and financial and administrative suggestions are made to that end. Medical research should also be supported at non-teaching hospitals, particularly those approved for pre-registration house appointments.

Finance

Very substantial additional sums will be required annually for medical education. The teaching hospitals are indispensable to the work and should receive grants towards both recurrent and capital expenditure. Ultimately amounts should be fixed and grants out of block grant received from the University Grants Commission made by the universities on application of the medical schools on behalf of their respective teaching centres, these grants being additional to those in respect of participation of the hospital in the national health service.

All hospitals throughout Great Britain should adopt a uniform accounting system, including costing.

King Edward's Hospital Fund

ON HOSPITAL DIET

King Edward's Hospital Fund for London, 10, Old Jewry, London, E.C.2. (Published July, 1943.)

At the outset the memorandum comments on the wide variation in practice in regard to (a) the quality and quantity of food provided, (b) methods adopted for preparing and serving food, and (c) the application to the diet of nutritional principles. As to (a) it is noted that it was formerly the practice to provide only one full meal a day, the remaining meals (notably breakfast and supper) consisting principally of bread, margarine, tea and soup, supplemented by such provisions as the patients' relatives brought in. It followed that a patient not so assisted might actually lack sufficient food. The Committee adds that it is not easy to justify the practice of leaving the patients to provide staple articles of diet, but notes that it is more and more the practice to provide all necessary food, and also cooked breakfasts and suppers. The cautious wording of the commendation inevitably suggests to the reader that we are yet far from universal recognition and acceptance of this responsibility by hospitals.

In the body of the report there is a strong recommendation that the substantial cooked breakfast should be given at a normal hour such as 8 a.m. and after nursing attention, when the patient is more likely to have an appetite for an adequate meal. The early morning cup of tea on waking is also commended. A reasonable, if restricted, choice of food is advocated particularly in the interests of the patient who may have a strong dislike for certain dishes. General ward diets are stated in some cases to be many years behind the times.

The second section of the report is devoted to the organisation of the catering department, and contains observations on the importance both of good buying and of good cooking, demonstrating by examples that it is false economy to try to save on wages of kitchen staff. One large hospital with a food bill of £20,000, by increasing its expenditure on kitchen salaries and wages from £1,000 to £2,000, actually showed a saving of £6,000 as well as a general improvement in diet. Importance of adequate modern kitchen equipment generally is stressed.

It is stated that the officer in charge of catering should either be a dietitian with adequate experience in large scale catering or else should act in full consultation with a dietitian. In the following paragraphs it is proposed that a catering committee should be set up in each hospital, the membership of which would include representatives of the house committee and of the medical staff, the house governor or secretary, the matron and the dietitian, with the catering officer as secretary, thereby implying that the dietitian would not be catering officer.

The recommendation is made that every hospital should have the services of a qualified dietitian to plan and supervise preparation and service of meals—small hospitals being grouped for this purpose. An alternative suggestion is that the King's Fund should offer dietetic advice to hospitals which express a wish for it.

An appendix to the memorandum contains the results of an investigation of actual meals served to patients and nurses at the three general hospitals of medium size which agreed to co-operate in the investigation. The results in terms of calories, fat, calcium, iron, and vitamins in the food served were found to be not altogether satisfactory.

Two further appendices deal respectively with an account of the setting up of a food service committee and the appointment of a dietitian as food supervisor at the General Infirmary at Leeds, and with group buying at the London Hospital.

King Edward's Hospital Fund

SECOND MEMORANDUM ON HOSPITAL DIET

10, Old Jewry, London, E.C.2. (Published June, 1945.)

The second Memorandum appeared in June, 1945, incorporating the results of a further eighteen months' experience. "This experience," says the Memorandum, "has shown that there is an overwhelming case for making the Catering Department a separate unit of hospital constitution, controlled by a senior officer responsible to the Board of Management through the chief executive officer. Control must be unified if efficiency is to be achieved."

Function of the Catering Officer

The catering officer should be responsible for: buying of food; control of stores; menu planning (in co-operation with dietitian, if the catering officer is not qualified in this respect); cooking and service; and, in the larger hospitals it will not be possible for the catering officer to give personal attention to all these duties, and she will need an appropriate number of assistants. For example, buying for a large hospital requires the services of a whole-time buyer, but the responsibility for providing the right foods is carried by the catering officer. In respect to service it is not suggested that the catering officer should take over from the ward sister the service of meals to the patient, for the sister knows better than anyone the type of meals most suitable and the likes and dislikes of the individual patients. The catering officer should co-operate with the medical staff, whose responsibility it is to prescribe the diets, and with sisters in seeing that suitable meals are provided and that the equipment for satisfactory service is available.

Financial Control

Lack of proper financial control is all too frequently found to be a consequence of divided responsibility, says the Report. It also seems to be related, in not a few instances, to a poor standard of catering.

In catering establishments, other than hospitals and similar institutions, the quality of the meals served is commonly maintained by the reaction of the consumer who pays for them. Falling off in the quality of the food is quickly reflected in receipts. The fact that hospitals are not affected in this manner adds force to the needs for financial machinery that shall ensure economy without impairing quality.

It is apparent that to raise the standard of catering in hospitals will need more money, in some cases a great deal more than is now being spent on food, kitchen equipment and staff. If more is to be spent in this manner, the need for skilful economy at all stages of the catering chain becomes greater, although, in any case, it is a primary requirement of hospital administration. It has already been demonstrated in more than one hospital in recent years that reorganisation of the catering arrangements involving payment of higher salaries to more experienced staff has actually led to a reduction in over-all cost.

The Report expresses the view that it must be the governing authority of the hospital that decides finally what expenditure on food and kitchen staff and equipment is justified, but the preparation of financial budgets to cover catering and the efficient use of the money that is granted are matters that should primarily be the responsibility of a catering officer. The division of control so often seen in hospital catering is unlikely to lead to adequate and efficient financing of the kitchens.

A basic need is for segregation of all accounts concerning the catering. Complete records are required showing expenditure on food, salaries and wages, and overheads including depreciation, the number of meals of each type served to patients, nurses, medical and other staff. Meticulous record keeping is the foundation of sound planning and preparing budgets. This would be one of the most important duties of the catering officer. The absence of proper records leads to waste and extravagance.

Need for Radical Changes in Existing Conditions

Reorganisation, it is said, of the catering system in hospitals along the lines recommended by the Fund may in many instances sharply conflict with traditional practice. This fact has to be faced. Perhaps the strongest tradition that will be invoked against radical changes is that which closely associates the feeding of patients with their nursing. It is a link with the days when the sick poor were as much in need of food as of treatment, and when charity gave them both. Thus was established the close association of the nursing staff with the preparation of the patients' meals, which, in one form or another, continues.

Staffing the Kitchens

Suggestions have been made from time to time that the number of kitchen staff can be related to the number of meals served. That is not so. A hard and fast standard cannot be laid down. Hospital kitchens differ so greatly in their lay-out, their equipment, particularly the extent to which labour-saving devices have been installed, and their cooking arrangements, that each individual kitchen needs special consideration when the question of staffing is raised.

The importance of having in the key position of chef or head cook a person of skill and initiative needs no emphasis. It should be unnecessary to stress the importance of giving that person adequate remuneration and satisfactory living conditions. Indeed, the post should be one not only carrying responsibility but conferring dignity.

The head cook should be permitted to have a say in the selection of her kitchen staff. He or she should also be encouraged to take an interest in the training of the junior members of the staff. This should not be left to chance. It should be carefully planned with a view to bringing out the best in them. There is an object lesson for the hospitals in the organisation of the kitchens of our large hotels and in the manner in which they train their junior staff.

No department of the kitchen should be left to the care of an unskilled staff. Vegetables will never be prepared as they should if they are cooked in a happy-go-lucky manner by the most junior kitchen-maid or a temporary daily woman. Cooking of vegetables calls for skill if it is desired to get anything better than a sodden mess from which the greater part of the nourishment has been extracted. Sweets also require careful preparation, if variety and attractiveness are desired. The line of least resistance is to get the kitchen-maid to make a milk pudding as best she can, and it is far too frequently followed.

Buying

The principles underlying good buying are the same whether small or large hospitals or groups of hospitals are concerned. The diet will be satisfactory and the catering efficient only when the purchase of food is given full and very careful consideration.

Buying of food for hospitals or other institutions is work for an expert who has experience and knowledge not only of market and price lists, but of the quality of food and the use to which it is to be put after it is bought, both in its cooking and in its service. Where the Catering Officer is not the buyer, the buyer should be under his direction. The buyer not only buys what is required by the caterer, but he sees that it is of the right quality and kind. Buying the most suitable quality of food at the cheapest price obtainable can only be done by studying price lists, markets and trade papers, interviewing travellers, experimenting and always trying to improve. Every advantage must be taken of seasonal and other changes that so profoundly affect the markets. A competent caterer has to live on the crest of the wave.

The second Memorandum deals also with record keeping and storing, emphasising the importance of keeping full records of all food purchased and issued; and menu planning with, ancillary to it, a number of recipes and recommendations about the planning of meals.

STAFFING THE HOSPITALS

Published jointly by the Minister of Health, the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Minister of Labour and National Service.
(Published December, 1945.)

The pamphlet with the above title issued jointly by the Minister of Health, the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Minister of Labour and National Service summed up in balanced terms the need for a substantial increase in both nursing and domestic staff in hospitals and the causes of the deficiency. It also outlined measures of reform which it is hoped would stimulate recruitment.

Nursing Staff

As to the cause of the shortage of nursing staff, at that time it emphasised that there had been no diminution in the rate of recruitment and that the same was true of domestic staff. The shortage arose from increased needs due to the expansion of the hospital and health service, whilst an increase of 170,000 births per annum since 1940 meant that many more midwives were also needed. That the existing shortage itself leading to over-worked staffs and strained working conditions was a discouragement to those who might otherwise take up hospital work either as nurses or domestics is faced, as was also the fact that whilst in the better hospitals the staff had a really excellent vigorous, corporate life, the undoubted examples still existing of less modern and less enlightened methods of hospital administration were too often thought of as typical. Hence, to stimulate recruitment, besides announcing substantially increased salary scales for all grades of nurse from enrolled assistant nurse to ward sister and the establishment of national machinery for adjusting wages of domestic grades, the pamphlet laid down certain minimum conditions of service which should be aimed at by all hospitals and similar institutions.

The amelioration of conditions of work was proposed, such as shorter hours, regular off duty times and holidays; better health supervision; better food, etc.

A reform proposed was in the direction of greater personal freedom for nurses, insistence that nurses, in off duty hours, should have the same scope for unrestricted use of their leisure as any other member of the community.

Domestic Staff

The code for domestic staff was very similar in outline and comparatively no less liberal. For both nurses and domestics not only national negotiating machinery but also appropriate internal committees to deal with matter not appropriate to the national machinery were recommended.

The official statement prefacing the codes said: "Perhaps the most important thing to remember about the codes is that most of the prescribed conditions, and in particular those which concern hours of work and off-duty arrangements, become progressively easier to achieve as more workers come into the hospital service."

NURSING AND DOMESTIC STAFF IN HOSPITALS

(Published December, 1948.)

These notes, which cover a wide range of subjects, are intended to be read in conjunction with the statement on hospital working conditions contained in "Staffing the Hospitals", a paper issued jointly in 1945 by the Health Departments and the Ministry of Labour and National Service.

The notes are a balanced mixture of information and advice. On the subject of nurse recruitment the information includes a summary of the machinery for filling vacancies, particulars of King Edward's Fund Nursing Recruitment Service, pre-nursing courses, the position of ancillary nursing grades, the intensive courses which service nursing orderlies, with certain prescribed experience, may take on leaving the Forces, and the various channels of overseas recruitment. In the way of advice, this section deals at some length with publicity, the selection of students, part-time staff, and the more effective use of male nurses.

On the subject of "publicity", it is suggested that hospital management committees may find it advisable to appoint one of their officers who has experience of nursing problems to co-ordinate the various activities which the booklet suggests and to represent the needs of the hospitals to the various bodies concerned.

Management committees are urged to use part-time nursing staff of all grades as fully as possible, and to adjust hospital routine where necessary to suit the convenience of part-time workers, especially married women.

The notes express the view that hospital management committees should consider whether they might not profitably increase the number of male nurses employed. In support of this they mention such factors as the longer average period of service obtainable from men than from women, and the fact that difficulties in employing, training and accommodating mixed staffs and arranging for married men to live out "are not insuperable".

A section of the booklet dealing with training in supervision gives interesting information about a series of experiments bearing on the whole problem of staff relations. These experiments are designed to assess the value of the "Training within Industry" courses which have been tried, says the booklet, with considerable success in American and British industrial undertakings, and also with some degree of success in hospitals in the United States. These courses are not concerned with the technical aspects of nursing, but with basic principal of supervision and personal relations. They are arranged by the Ministry of Labour and National Service who, it is understood, are prepared, when their resources permit, to give management committees thorough demonstrations of the content of the courses.

The notes also deal at some length with matters affecting domestic staff.

Management committees, where they find it impossible to obtain or accommodate additional resident staff, are urged to make every effort to recruit non-resident staff, this being essential if the fullest use is to be made of the services of available married women. Other sections relating to domestic staff deal with training, selection, superannuation and staff establishment. It is satisfactory to see that under this last heading the notes mention the use of labour-saving devices.

EMPLOYMENT OF DOMESTIC STAFF IN HOSPITALS

King's Fund Recommendations

10, Old Jewry, London, E.C.2.

(Published July, 1946.)

In the course of 1945 King Edward's Hospital Fund for London received a request from the Factory and Welfare Advisory Board of the Ministry of Labour and National Service to examine matters connected with the employment of domestic staff in hospitals, with a view to making recommendations for consideration by hospitals. The Board had noted that although a considerable advance had been made in the provision of suitable accommodation and amenities for hospital domestic staff, there was still a grave shortage of labour which was aggravated by a high rate of turnover.

The Fund agreed to the request, and a committee was set up under the chairmanship of the Rt. Hon. Malcolm McCorquodale, P.C., with the following terms of reference:—

"To consider matters connected with the employment (but not the remuneration) of resident and daily domestic staff in hospitals, with a view to making recommendations on staff management and welfare supervision." The following is a summary of the committee's recommendations:—

A. General

1. Workers from Europe. The Government's plans for bringing over women from Europe for domestic work should be implemented with the least possible delay.

2. Status of Domestic Work. The Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Labour, in their advisory work with juveniles, should give due importance to domestic work as a main factor in the well-being of the community, and as offering opportunities for a skilled and satisfying career.

3. Training in Personnel Management. Three-month courses in personnel management, having special reference to hospital work, should be arranged by the Institute of Labour Management, the Ministry of Labour, or some other appropriate body.

4. Economy of Labour. One of the Government departments should organise an Exhibition of the labour-saving appliances which have been found most serviceable for hospital use, and information as to their availability be supplied to the hospitals. The exhibition might be organised in London first and might tour the provinces later.

The proposed National Institute of House-workers should make a scientific analysis of domestic work in hospitals, with a view to increased efficiency, economy of labour and regrading of personnel.

In all plans for hospital construction, architects should pay special attention to the need for economising in personnel and mechanising domestic work as far as possible.

5. Uniform as a Factor in Raising Status. The Board of Trade should give high priority to the relaxation of restrictions on the uniform of hospital staffs.

B. Recommendations to Hospitals

1. Workers from Europe. Hospitals should make the fullest use of the opportunities provided by the Government's recent decision to admit European women for domestic employment in hospitals. This may be either by applying for workers brought over under the Government scheme, or by getting in touch themselves with workers of any nationality other than German, and applying for permits for their admission.

2. Status of Domestic Work. Every effort to be made to raise the status of domestic work by offering well-planned training schemes and better opportunities of promotion.

3. Appointment of Domestic Supervisor and Welfare Officer. All but the smallest hospitals should appoint a full-time domestic supervisor and welfare worker, responsible for the recruitment, training, supervision and welfare of daily and resident domestic staff. The domestic supervisor should be accustomed to dealing with people and also should have the right personality for the work. She should have had training and experience in institutional management or domestic science and, if possible, some training in personnel management.

The domestic supervisor should be responsible to the Matron, except in financial matters, in which it should be her duty to advise the Board through the appropriate channels.

The post of domestic supervisor should be made equal, in status and remuneration, to comparable posts in industry in the area.

4. Economy of Labour. Greater use should be made of labour-saving equipment, as it becomes available.

As the overall shortage of labour is likely to continue indefinitely, the domestic routines in hospital should be reviewed in order to economise time and effort and to reduce to the minimum the number of man-hours needed for the essential cleaning, upkeep and service.

In plans for building, all details of construction and choice of materials should be considered from the point of view of economising in personnel and mechanising domestic work.

5. The Nursing Staff and Domestic Duties. As soon as sufficient domestic staff are available, the nursing staff should be relieved of domestic responsibilities.

Carefully planned teaching and practice in housecraft should be a recognised part of the nurses' training, but the domestic requirements of the wards should not depend on the student nurses to such an extent as to absorb much of their time or energies.

6. Type of Workers to be Recruited. Every effort should be made to offer conditions, training and opportunities of promotion which will attract a better type of worker. At the same time, hospitals cannot depend entirely on these, and domestic work in hospital affords a valuable form of employment for those with some physical or mental handicap. Each hospital should decide whether it can staff on normal workers only, or whether it should take also the handicapped. If the latter, special arrangements should be made for their supervision and training and it might be well to secure the co-operation of the other workers in taking responsibility for them.

7. Ward Orderlies. Hospitals might consider the employment of ward orderlies who should have a special schedule of duties, including some of the non-nursing services to the patients which were previously part of the nurses' routine. Ward orderlies should wear a distinctive uniform.

8. Male Domestic Orderlies. Hospitals might consider the greatly increased employment of male domestic orderlies and take immediate steps to recruit ex-service men for this.

9. Hours of Duty. The straight shift system should be introduced wherever it is practicable. Where there are not sufficient domestics for this, the objection to hospital hours can be met by arranging for more evenings off duty for resident domestic staff. This might be made possible by the employment of more part-time workers, by a reallocation of work between resident and non-resident staff, or by "help-yourself" arrangement for the evening meal for all staff.

10. Transport. Hospitals which recruit or might recruit daily workers from residential areas a short distance away, should provide a 'bus to collect them if public transport is not adequate.

Hospitals in the country should see to it that there is transport to the nearest town for their resident staff.

11. Accommodation and Amenities. Better accommodation for domestic staff should, and no doubt will, be arranged in many hospitals as soon as building is possible. In the meantime, attention should be given to any details which help to create a happy atmosphere in the home and to make the worker feel she is regarded as an individual. Where it is practicable, the domestic staff should have a floor or wing to themselves, or in larger hospitals a self-contained home with a separate entrance. The catering should be the same for the domestic staff as for the nurses. There should be a canteen or other meals service for the daily workers.

12. Health. In hospitals of suitable size a minor ailments clinic should be held daily and domestic staff encouraged to use it. On the general health care of staff, hospitals are referred to the recommendations in the Memorandum on the Supervision of Nurses' Health published by King Edward's Hospital Fund.

13. Pensions. Consideration should be given to the arrangement of non-contributory pension schemes for long-service domestics, and such schemes should be fully explained to every worker and published as part of the hospital's recruitment policy.

14. Uniform. As soon as the regulations permit, consideration should be given to the value, both for recruitment and for morale, of an attractive and practical uniform.

15. Nurseries. The larger hospitals should consider the possibility of providing nurseries where daily workers can leave their children, or arrangements should be made with a local nursery so as to fit in with the hours at which the workers are needed in hospital.

16. Recruitment through the Hospital Population. Much more recruitment work for domestic staff should be undertaken through in-patients or their visitors, or through out-patients.

17. Contact with the Ministry of Labour and National Service. In view of the active steps taken by other employers, hospital authorities should make sure that their staff requirements are constantly before the Local Employment Committees and other advisory committees of the Ministry of Labour in the region.

REPORT OF WORKING PARTY ON THE RECRUITMENT AND TRAINING OF NURSES

Published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, Price 2s. 6d. (Published September, 1947.)

The Report of the Working Party appointed by the Minister of Health, the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Minister of Labour and National Service to enquire into the recruitment and training of nurses was published in September, 1947.

The Working Party was given very wide terms of reference. It was suggested that it should survey the whole field of recruitment and training of nurses of all types and it was given the utmost freedom to determine the lines along which, and the limits within which, it should pursue its enquiry. It was, however, laid down that the Working Party's objective should not be to attempt to formulate interim proposals to remedy or palliate present difficulties but rather to assess, if possible, what nursing force in terms of quantity and quality was likely to be required in the future, when the national health service had been developed and to suggest how best that force could be trained and deployed.

Intelligence of Nurses

From the results of its survey of intelligence the Working Party concludes :

- (i) The very wide range of ability among nurses shows that the profession is far from being homogeneous in quality. No uniform and satisfactory training course can be given to candidates of the widely diverse levels of ability found among student nurses.
- (ii) If training requirements are to be properly met, the selection of candidates must have regard to their ability to meet these requirements. This end can best be achieved by employing standard tests of intelligence in conjunction with other selection techniques.
- (iii) Candidates for nurse training who, though suitable on personality and other grounds, are below the level of ability required to complete the course successfully, should be encouraged to accept employment in a capacity ancillary to nursing.

Intake and Loss of Trained Nurses

The main results of an analysis of the intake and loss of trained nurses are :—

- (a) The number of trained nurses entering first employment in hospital each year is probably between 9,500 and 10,000.

(b) About 6,300 trained nurses each year transfer to hospitals from nursing employment in other hospitals or elsewhere.

(c) The average number of trained nurses in the hospital field leaving the profession each year is estimated to be about 5,600 ; another 3,000 are estimated to leave the profession from the public health and other fields.

(d) Rather more than a third of the loss from hospitals is due to marriage. Sickness accounts for about 9% of the loss from general hospitals and for 5 to 15% in other hospitals.

(e) The annual replacement rate of trained nurses must be at least about 9,000 a year before any expansion in the size of the profession can take place.

Wastage during Training

The average wastage during training in all fields at present amounts to 54%. While some part of this wastage is undoubtedly due to the admission of candidates who lack the ability or temperament to pursue the training successfully the exceptionally high rate of wastage among student nurses clearly indicates that they are expected to work and train under conditions which even many of those suitably equipped are not prepared to tolerate.

The results of a special study of the causes of the wastage indicated that there is at present a general factor underlying all causes of wastage. This factor is composite and manifests itself as the combined effect of all the various reasons which are given for leaving—hospital discipline, food, pay, etc. The reasons which enter into this composite factor are not equally important. First in significance is hospital discipline, the second the attitude of senior staff. Inadequacy of food both in quality and quantity and the span and pressure of working hours come next in that order. Following on this are poor accommodation, insufficient pay, poor social and recreational facilities and the domestic work which students have to carry out. Dissatisfaction either with training methods or examinations is apparently unimportant in its effect upon attitudes towards nurse training. Dissatisfaction with arrangements for the care of nurses' health is in rather a different category; it does not tend to provoke discontent with other features of hospital life as do hospital discipline and the attitude of the senior staff.

From this study the conclusion clearly emerges that the most important cause of wastage is the type of discipline which pervades the training schools. Self abnegation has been the keynote of a code of discipline originally inspired by a conventional tradition and, although thus historically intelligible, the tradition has, through the insularity of institutional life, been preserved more or less unaltered by the profound changes in social life which have affected the community as a whole. During the inter-war years a generation has grown up nurtured on modern ideas of personal freedom and the relationship between the sexes, and inevitably a gulf has separated representatives of the old order from the newcomers to nursing. Potential student nurses to-day for the most part regard nursing as a profession with no more justification than any other for encroaching upon their personal life. It is not surprising, therefore, that friction should occur between the older and younger generations of nurses, and feelings are exacerbated by the psychological deprivations which the older generation and perforce to suffer and from which the emancipated younger generation of nurses is free.

Experience has shown that it is of little use merely appealing to hospital authorities to modify discipline or to adopt more understanding attitudes and, therefore, the introduction of structural changes in the organisation and staffing of training schools is needed.

As a result of its investigations into wastage of student nurses the Working Party concludes that the following changes must be introduced:

- (i) Nurses in training must no longer be regarded as junior employees subject to an outworn system of discipline. They must be accorded full student status with the conditions such status implies, so far as the intrinsic requirements of nurse training permit.
- (ii) A new selection procedure for student nurses (see later).
- (iii) A method of selection for appointment to senior posts which will help to secure that only those are appointed who possess the capacity for developing satisfactory human relationships.
- (iv) Steps must be taken to improve the quantity and quality of diet and to provide suitable accommodation and other amenities.
- (v) The training day must be reduced in span so that it approximates as closely as is practicable to that of a "normal" working day. This involves the introduction of a three-shift system.

The Training of Nurses—New Scheme

Student nurses should be treated as students for a period of two years, the first eighteen months of which would be devoted to common content for all students and the remaining six months to concentrated study in a chosen field. (This is based on a five-day training week of 40 hours and six weeks' annual vacation.) At the end of the two years and subject to examinations the nurse would be granted provisional state registration and would be entitled to the pay, status and title of state registered nurse, but would be required to spend a third year in nursing practice under supervision before provisional registration would be confirmed, after which the nurse would be licensed to engage in private practice or be employed otherwise than under supervision. There would be one common register for all nurses.

During her 18 months basic training the student nurse would cover a much wider field than she does at present, particularly on the preventive side. From the start of her training the student would be made aware of all fields of nursing and what the community does to promote health.

The state examination would be divided into two parts, the first taking place at the end of 18 months and the second at the end of two years, the latter being more closely related to the specific content of the chosen course. The verdict of examination should be checked against evidence of subsequent proficiency.

With regard to midwifery qualification, it is suggested that the present training requirements of the College of Midwives could be integrated in the scheme outlined, thus leading towards unification of the nursing profession.

Some Implications of the New Scheme of Training

Basic Conditions: Conditions must be such as to permit the planning and conduct of training courses unhampered by the staffing requirements of particular hospitals; this calls for adequate and stable domestic and nursing staff in the hospitals concerned.

The dissociation of training from staffing needs will place the student under the control of the training authority and not of the hospital, and the cost of training should be dealt with entirely separately from the general maintenance expenditure of the hospitals concerned; student nurses would not be employees of the hospital. It will be the concern of the Minister of Health to watch the demand for and stimulate the supply of nurses. The notion of "recruitment" will no longer apply though the Ministry of Labour and National Service will continue to be concerned with the initial selection of a career.

A three-shift system will be necessary, for qualified staff no less than students, in order to achieve a "normal" working day.

Teaching Needs: It is essential that measures be taken to safeguard the sufficiency and quality of the teaching staff who should be skilled in handling people and in the use of the most modern educational methods and technical devices for instruction.

Remuneration: Since in the future student nurses are to be treated as students and, instead of training being incidental to their work in the wards, the service they render to the hospital becomes incidental to their training, the basis of their remuneration calls for re-consideration. It is necessary that a training grant be made to a student nurse adequate to cover reasonable personal expenses (including on vacation) in addition to board residence or an allowance in lieu, and free tuition, the grant being paid by the training authority. Nevertheless, it is of considerable importance to stress the view that what is required is not so much slight changes in the size of grants paid during the relatively brief training period but better training and wider career prospects with enhanced status and opportunities.

Probably one-third or even half of the wastage of nurses during training could be prevented by selection methods, which would exclude those unfitted for nurse training at the outset. Perhaps a quarter of the student intake in recent years was unsuitable for nurse training; about half of these would appear to be temperamentally and half intellectually unfit for nurse training.

It is, therefore, necessary to assess in advance the candidate's capacity to respond to training and, having studied reports of experience in other comparable fields, a simple and straightforward procedure is recommended which should be used only by specially trained persons. This approach would involve a careful interview by the personnel selection officer during which particulars are elicited concerning general education and occupational background as well as of interests, stability and personality; a questionnaire dealing with occupational preference, "self-knowledge" and health; and standardised tests of intelligence.

Recruitment: It appears that the recruitment of candidates for nursing is a secondary task; the primary task is to remove the deterrents to recruitment which are much the same as the causes of training wastage.

Organisation and Administration

Nurse Training Units: Both hospitals and public health agencies should form a composite training unit of which there should be at least one in every hospital region. Existing schools may serve as key institutions, but none will be complete in itself. The organisation of the training in each unit would be the responsibility of a director or principal assisted by an adequate staff, some full time and others (staffs of hospitals and public health agencies) part time.

Regional Organisation: Circumstances will dictate the number and size of training units in each region, but there should be two subdivisions of nursing administration; one to organise the nursing services of the community (i.e. the function of the regional hospital board, hospital management committees, boards of governors of teaching hospitals and local health authorities), and the other the recruitment and training. Each unit would have its education committee comprising representatives of the teaching staff, hospital matrons and governing bodies of the institutions comprising the unit.

A regional nursing training board with wide representation would need to be established to co-ordinate the work of the units in the region. The principal duties of such board would include:—

- (i) planning and co-ordination of facilities for training;
- (ii) co-ordination of standards of admission and allocation of students;
- (iii) approval of supervisors;
- (iv) formation of advisory centres.

Central Organisation: It is presumed that standing advisory committees for nursing will be set up by the Minister concerned, in addition to the Central and Scottish Health Services Councils, to advise on the general administration of the nursing services and organisation at the national level of the system of training. The existing Ministry of Health Division of Nursing and that of the Department of Health for Scotland will need to be strengthened so as to carry out efficiently inspection and supervision of the system of training. An adviser on nursing education would be required on the staff of the chief nursing officer.

Headquarters Research Units: Headquarters research units should be set up at the Ministry of Health and the Department of Health for Scotland to initiate and co-ordinate research work on technical matters affecting the work and life of the nursing profession including recruitment and training.

Experimental Centres: "Laboratories" for the headquarters research staff would be experimental training centres, which would act as observation centres and sources of new methods, this all determined by the criterion that training should contribute to reduce the incidence or duration of sickness.

General Nursing Council: It is assumed that the General Nursing Councils will continue to be responsible for examination, registration and discipline, the syllabus being subject to the approval of the Health Department.

The constitution, however, should be amended to arrange for regional representation on the Council itself (instead of nationally elected representatives), and the two existing Councils (for England and Wales and for Scotland) should be amalgamated to form a General Nursing Council for Great Britain upon which should be represented government departments, nurses and university or other educational agencies.

If training of midwives is incorporated in nurse training the General Nursing Councils and the Central Midwives Board should be combined to form one governing body to cover all fields of nursing and midwifery in England, Wales and Scotland. This body should include representatives of government departments, nurses, midwives, university and other educational agencies, and might be called the General Council for Nurses and Midwives of Great Britain.

Effects of Proposals

Effects of three shift system: Having taken a varied sample of hospitals and made necessary adjustments to achieve uniformity, it appeared that the general hospitals in the sample require about 30 trained nurses per 100 beds to operate a three-shift system. This represented an increase of about 50% for voluntary general hospitals and 85% for municipal. It is only possible to make the most tentative estimate of the number of additional trained nurses required to operate the three-shift working day throughout the country, but the maximum number is not likely to be less than 12,000 and may exceed that figure. An addition of 8,000 (not all trained nurses) would be required to staffs of mental hospitals, sanatoria and public health institutions.

Effects of introducing student status: The number of additional nurses required to make possible the introduction of student status in training schools is estimated at between 14,000 and 15,000 trained nurses and 5,000 nursing orderlies. To maintain the numerical strength of the nursing profession at its December, 1945, figure requires an annual intake of newly qualified nurses of some 9,000. If the annual intake were maintained at 20,000 suitable recruits, the number of trained nurses entering the profession each year might rise to 15,000, that is, a margin over replacement of not less than 5,000. If all these could be devoted to providing the staff necessary to secure the three-shift day and student status the additional force required of, say, 24,000 trained nurses could be built up in five years, and probably 14,000 students would provide sufficient nurses to meet the increased replacement rate of 12,000 a year.

All this demands the removal of all restrictions on the employment of married persons, the development of part-time service and the extension of the use of male nurses.

It is estimated that the trained nursing force at December, 1945, was 88,000, and that the minimum required to meet the proposals made is 112,000. Given the immediate shortage of 9/10,000, the requirements call for a trained nursing force of 120/125,000, and this is not having regard to the (largely unknown) additional requirements of the National Health Service.

WORKING PARTY ON THE RECRUITMENT AND TRAINING OF NURSES

Minority Report

Published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office.
Price 1s. 6d. (Published September, 1948.)

The Minority Report was prepared because there was a divergence of view between Dr. Cohen and the other members of the Working Party on the nature of the basic problems in the nursing situation.

A completely new departure in method is proposed on scientific lines since it would probably be true to say that in the face of a seemingly intractable nursing situation the old methods of compiling reports on nursing can do little more than solve an occasional problem by dint of persistent trial and error in discussion. All bias, however subtle, in the new approach to the problem must be avoided, and it is urged that scientific method where applicable must be followed wherever it leads, the unpalatability of relevant facts not being allowed to prevent their coming to light. In order to be effective, an enquiry into hospital nursing services must examine the organisation of a hospital as a whole, for the nurse's role cannot, without loss of perspective, be abstracted from the context of the institution in which she works. The type of enquiry now proposed is, in effect, operational research in the field of health, the object of which would be to ascertain the conditions in which each component—staffs, buildings, equipment, siting, size and functions—may contribute to the optimum working of the total scheme.

The Community's Nursing Needs

Unless an answer can be given to the fundamental question "what is the correct number of nurses?" little progress can be made in planning a nursing service. A distinction must be made between this basic task of finding an answer to certain key questions and the need to effect certain changes, e.g. humanising hospital discipline, the justification for which is not doubted by those familiar with the facts. In the first case, a fairly considerable research effort may be needed; in the second, the situation demands an effort of will to bring about the necessary change. Attention is now to be concentrated on the former problem. Examples are given of past failures to estimate the nursing and other professional requirements of the community.

In discussions with the late Mr. Geoffrey Pyke it became evident to Dr. Cohen that any calculations of nursing needs must be closely linked up with the question of the correct allocation of woman power in the interests of the community as a whole, not merely in a localised area. Health planning within the master plan for the national economy must seek to use the national resources allocated to it in the best interests of the nation as a whole. Factors which have to be taken into consideration when making any estimate of nursing needs include an estimate of the number of beds required, and the correct size of the curative services, this linking up with proposals regarding the preventive services.

How Many Beds?

Probably the most important single factor in attempting to determine the size of the nursing service is an estimate of the number of beds required, but unfortunately, when approached, various authorities throughout the country have made widely different recommendations. Certainly there are many practical difficulties to be encountered when attempting such an estimate, but proposals put forward rarely offer any sound basis on which to build. In 1945-46, for instance, a series of hospital surveys throughout England and Wales was undertaken by the Nuffield Provincial Hospitals Trust. The recommended bed ratios for a provision of all types of bed per 1,000 of the population ranged from 6.6 to 10.1, an impossibly wide range to be of use in building up a hospital service. Whatever ratio of nursing or medical staff to beds was adopted, the upper limit would, on these recommendations, exceed the lower by nearly 50 per cent.

Opinion versus Research

Reforms in the past have been advanced on social or moral grounds rather than on the strength of scientific or economic evidence, but, as Sir Oliver Franks has recently stated, planning in the health, as in other fields, involves "decisions of policy quantitatively expressed in the form of programmes and such measures as in particular circumstances may be necessary to ensure the performance of these programmes."

No solution to the really basic problems of nursing reconstruction may be expected without a radical change in the current attitude towards research in the social sciences. Two types of research organisation are proposed—one to study the common and many-sided problems which affect not only nursing, but other aspects of the industrial and social life of the community, such as the optimum distribution of woman power and methods of increasing productivity in health and other fields; the other to be located in the Health Departments and to be concerned with problems specific to the health field. This latter would act as a sociological research base for health planning with a section allotted specifically to nursing problems.

Criterion of Nursing Productivity

Before it is possible to determine the correct allocation of woman power for nursing, the effectiveness or output of nurses must be assessed in order to measure the effect on production of increasing or decreasing the size of the nursing profession. The aim is to ascertain the number of nurses to train and employ in the interests of the community as a whole as contrasted both with the smallest number with which the health service can operate without breaking down and with the largest number that could be attracted to the profession. The problem is one of measuring efficiency by evaluating on some acceptable criterion the performance of nursing duties and the criterion suggested is the patient's duration of stay, this being held to be an index of the duration of his sickness and the only objective measure of the success of nurses and doctors in speeding his recovery. This has, however, never been explicitly nor probably even implicitly the aim of hospitals in the past which have been more concerned to play a custodial role, not always with the most desirable psychological effects on the patient.

Detailed Examination of Hypothesis

The hypothesis to be examined may be formulated thus: in hospitals of the same type, where provision is made for the same sickness groups in similar proportions and where the quality of the nursing or medical staff is roughly the same, the average duration of stay depends on the number of patients per nurse and per doctor. It is assumed that the quality of hospital facilities and equipment in so far as it has an effect on the patient's stay varies with the number of doctors and therefore is taken into account.

In the general training hospital (voluntary) it was discovered that there was definitely an inverse relationship between the nurse-patient ratio and the duration of stay, that the productivity secured by the saving in the patients' working days would just about offset the increase in salaries due to an increased number of trained nurses, and that the presence or absence of student nurses had no noticeable effect on the patient's duration of stay.

In general non-training hospitals (voluntary), the majority being cottage hospitals, the trained nurse has to be skilled and resourceful since there are generally no full time resident medical staff. To reduce patient stay from 17.6 to 16.6 days, an additional 1,000 trained nurses would be necessary, or alternatively, probably three times as many assistant nurses or 3,400 additional part-time doctors would meet the need.

The data suggests that in mental hospitals, nursing assistants are performing a useful function in accelerating patients' recovery, a function apparently carried out more effectively by them than by trained mental nurses under present systems of training.

The evidence indicates that in tuberculosis sanatoria, the particular quantity and quality of nursing care has comparatively little effect on the patient's rate of recovery, rest and good food being the essential features here. This emphasises the importance of the preventive services in this field since the curative processes cannot readily be speeded up.

The nursing staff needs of the chronic sick might be met by engaging additional nursing orderlies to assist the trained nurse, but this is propounded only as a temporary expedient pending further factual enquiries into the true nursing needs of the chronic sick.

Salaries

The economic value of a nurse's work depends on the value of the work of those she helps to regain their health. The immediate and direct productivity of a nurse (calculated to be £200 p.a. value in a general training hospital, £230 p.a. in a general non-training hospital) is considerably less than that of the average worker, but it does not necessarily follow that she should be paid less. Her indirect contribution to the physical productivity of the community should be noted—care for the housewives and the children, and of the old and infirm.

Recruitment and Selection

Nurse recruitment policy should be set against a background of the distribution of national man and woman power, and within the limits so determined, an even flow of suitable candidates to all the different training centres should be encouraged. It is thought that though intellectual ability is desirable in nursing candidates, more important still is a kind and cheerful disposition combined with a deep interest in the work. A psychological procedure of selection is advocated because it is economical in time, money and effort by reducing the chances of accepting candidates likely to be failures, but whatever method of selection is fixed upon, it should be conducted by personnel selection officers. To test the selection procedure an experiment should be undertaken to compare the average stay of a group of patients in the charge of nurses who had been selected for training with the stay of patients in the care of nurses not so selected; modification in the selection procedure should then be initiated based on these results. The full value of a selection procedure will not become evident until the correct lines of training have been laid down and the necessary humanitarian reforms introduced into the life and work of hospital nurses.

Period of Training

Evidence from job analysis indicates that the present three year course of nurse training could succeed equally well in two years provided domestic duties and undue repetitive work were eliminated. It does not follow, however, that a two year course would be the ideal course. If a two year course is adopted it should be regarded as a provisional measure pending further enquiry.

Content of Training

This can only be determined by referring again to the function of a nurse—to reduce the incidence and duration of disease. New analyses of nursing duties in hospitals need to be carried out in terms of patient needs as implied by the criterion of lengths of stay. The methods and content of training whether general or special should further be evaluated in the light of the effectiveness of the trained nurse. Allied with the question of training is the problem of assessing proficiency. All nursing examinations should be devised bearing in mind the end that nurse training is directed towards supplying the needs of the health service. Accordingly it is suggested that the Divisions of Nursing should be both the training and examining authority. The question of the future of the General Nursing Councils needs further consideration by a specially appointed body.

Working Conditions

Widespread inquiries have led to the conclusion that the disciplinary system is probably the chief cause of student wastage. Reference is made to the stiff and formal atmosphere, the "caste" system, the objections raised to married women, the difficulty of maintaining outside contacts and interests, the failure to secure a food supply adequate in quantity and quality, and it is once more urged that these complaints should be rectified and a generally more humane and co-operative spirit replace the stern hierarchical and segregated atmosphere of many training hospitals.

REPORT OF THE WORKING PARTY ON MIDWIVES

Published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office.
Price 2s. 9d. (Published January, 1949.)

Among outstanding points made in the report, and the working party's conclusions, are the following:

Conditions of Work and Future Requirements

Evidence shows that many midwives, particularly in the domiciliary service, are at present greatly overworked. During the next few years the aim should be to reach a lower case load for district midwives, to relieve as far as possible the pressure of work on midwives working in hospitals, and to extend the amount of hospital accommodation available. The district midwife working in an urban area should by 1953 have an average case load of 55 instead of 66.4 as in 1944. A decline in the number of births would assist in securing this reduction in the case load, but against this factor has to be set four factors exerting opposing influences:—(i) the age trend among midwives, which will mean more deaths and retirements in the future; (ii) the decrease in the number of women from whom recruits may be drawn; (iii) the wider and more varied demand for the services of young women; (iv) a higher marriage rate and generally lower age of marriage among women. A decline in the number of births will, therefore, not solve to any marked degree the problem of shortages in the midwifery profession. In order to achieve the aims of lower case loads, less overwork and better quality of care both in the homes and in the hospital, the number of practising midwives must be increased by recruitment from hitherto untapped sources.

It is estimated that to secure the requisite desirable minimum of practising midwives the figure of midwives qualifying annually must be raised to about 2,100 as compared with the 1944-47 average of 1,790.

Shortage of midwives is due, inter alia, to nurses taking the midwifery qualifications without intending to practise; to the unsatisfactory nature of the present course of training; to the high rate of examination failure; and to lack of promotion prospects.

The Midwife's Place in the Health Team

The midwife should be the practitioner of normal midwifery, the expert in normal child-bearing in all its varied aspects. The doctor is her partner in the detection and treatment of abnormalities, the health visitor in public health and health education and in the rearing of the child whose immediate post-natal existence the midwife has seen firmly established.

The midwife is no mere "delivery woman" whose prime function is the skilful delivery of a live child. While that is the climax of her task, it started months before, early in pregnancy, and should, in the Working Party's view, continue for at least a month after delivery. This implies that the midwife will remain in attendance, visiting perhaps two or three times weekly during the difficult period when the newly delivered mother is finding her feet, getting about again, and coping with a small baby.

If the foregoing is to be the function of the midwife, she must be a professional woman of standing and her level of education and qualities of character must be high, and if the midwifery profession is to attract and hold the type of woman it requires, the midwife must be given such training and conditions of service as will enable her to become and remain a professional woman, as are the doctor, the teacher and the civil servant.

It is important that those actually working the National Health Service should have an opportunity of taking some part in shaping it, and it is therefore recommended that in each hospital region a Maternity Services Committee should be set up, to include obstetricians, general practitioners and midwives.

In a postscript to its Report the Working Party states that its attention has been "drawn to many complaints both from Medical Officers of Health and midwives that general practitioners giving maternity service under Part IV of the National Health Service Act are tending to take over the whole of ante-natal care as well as relegating midwives to the status of maternity nurses. In some cases midwives are not seeing patients until they go to deliver them. Furthermore, pupils are getting no opportunity to see ante-natal care.

"This is entirely contrary to the development of the maternity services as outlined to us by representatives of the Health Department and as envisaged by us. . . . We recognise that it is right that a general practitioner should accept his full responsibility for his patient but not that he should exclude his partner, the midwife, whose function is, we should have thought, well established and clearly recognised. Moreover, as already stated . . . we are convinced that it is not possible for the present number of doctors to take over complete responsibility for all maternity work in addition to their other commitments, even if this were desirable. As we have said, however, we do not consider it in the patient's interest for either party to monopolise the case. They should work as a team.

"We hope that prompt administrative action will be taken to stop this new and unwelcome trend which could wreck the structure of the midwifery services."

Training

There should be a common basic training for nurses and midwives, followed—in the case of midwives—by a year's specialist training with a revised and improved curriculum. Basic training should include at least a four weeks' period in obstetrics. Except for certain special posts, there is no need for a midwife to be a State Registered Nurse, but until the new training can be adopted only State Registered Nurses should be trained as midwives. Existing holders of the S.C.M. qualification without a nursing qualification should be eligible for all midwifery appointments. Separate Schools of Midwifery, with finance and administration separate from the hospital system, should be set up. Pupil midwives should have student status and there should be obligatory refresher courses for all practising midwives.

Analgesia

The Working Party consider that the limited means of analgesia at the midwife's disposal place her at a distinct disadvantage in the face of the growing public demand for relatively painless childbirth and they urge that the Medical Research Council should be asked to set up a committee to find a more effective method of analgesia for use by midwives. "Without the addition of this weapon in her armamentarium, the midwife cannot play her proper part in the health team. Furthermore, until this problem is solved the swing away from domiciliary confinement will continue."

Pay, Promotion and Living Conditions

It is clear that midwives, both in domiciliary and institutional work are acutely dissatisfied with their pay, and in any general scaling up of medico-social salaries the midwife must share. Present living-out allowances can only be described as deterrents to living out, and if, as the Working Party think, it is desirable for some midwives to live out, the allowances will have to be more realistic.

Promotion prospects should be increased by ensuring that in institutions senior midwifery appointments are not absorbed by nursing personnel.

All maternity units of 50 or more beds should be in the charge of an independent matron; units of 30 to 49 beds, a superintendent midwife with rank of assistant matron; units of less than 30 beds, a departmental midwifery sister. The creation of a new rank of senior sister is recommended for those unwilling to give up contact with patients for advancement on the administrative side. Every local health authority should appoint as non-medical supervisor of midwives a certified midwife.

A survey should be made of the distribution of midwives, and inducement payments made to attract them to under-staffed areas. The number of cases a midwife should deal with should be reduced by 1953 to 55 a year in urban areas. Below the rank of maternity ward sister, the "straight duty" system should be instituted for institutional midwives, while for domiciliary midwives off-duty times and adequate reliefs should be ensured by local grouping. Every domiciliary midwife ought to be provided with a car and given sufficient financial help to run it. Houses should be provided for established midwives and hostels for junior and pupil midwives. The holiday entitlement of midwives should be raised to five weeks a year, or alternatively they should be given a day in lieu of Bank Holidays.

Recruitment

In order to secure the necessary increase in recruitment to 2,100 newly qualified midwives each year by 1953, it will be necessary to look to schools other than only the secondary grammar school for recruitment. More guidance should be given to school leavers on the scope of midwifery as a career. Special steps must be taken to recruit older women from the 30-45 age group. In particular, consideration must be given to the use of special teaching methods adapted to the needs of such older women, and it may be desirable to set aside certain schools for them. A short course on inferior qualification is not, however, recommended. Not nearly enough use is at present being made of part-time workers, and they must be encouraged and suitable steps taken to secure their employment.

Administration

The proposal of the Nurses' Working Party that the General Nursing Councils for England and Wales and for Scotland should be amalgamated with the respective Central Midwives' Boards to form a single General Council for Nurses and Midwives of Great Britain is rejected. In the view of the Midwives' Working Party, the argument that the unity of the nursing and maternity professions is a desirable object cannot be accepted. While both may base their training on a common foundation, subsequent divergence is considerable in function, methods and principles. A single statutory body could not satisfactorily control both.

It is not considered either that there should be a fusion of the English and Scottish Central Midwives' Boards. With separate legislation, such unification is not thought desirable, and the economies likely to result would be negligible. The Working Party, however, recommends definite liaison arrangements between the two Central Midwives' Boards, and closer co-operation between the Boards and the General Nursing Councils by means of an informal Consultative Committee.

The Midwives' Working Party also disagrees with the Nurses' Working Party on the latter's proposal that an Advisor on Nursing Education should be appointed to the staff of the Chief Nursing Officer of the Ministry of Health and the Department of Health for Scotland. The ground for this disagreement is the belief that professional education and standards are not the province of Government Departments, but of the professions themselves.

REPORT OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON HOSPITAL ACCOUNTS

Published by the Institute of Hospital Administrators, 75, Portland Place, London, W.1. Price 8s. 6d. (Published June, 1948.)

The Joint Committee on Hospital Accounts comprising members of the Institute of Hospital Administrators, the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales and the Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, was set up in July, 1946, with the following terms of reference:

"To formulate proposals for a set of accounts that would be applicable to all classes of hospitals under the National Health Service Bill and in doing so to give serious consideration to the need for close co-relation between any method of preparing accounts and the provision of general statistical data."

The Committee made the following general recommendations:

The Committee has considered various methods for the preparation of hospital accounts and recommends that the most suitable is a General Income and Expenditure Account based upon simplified departmental or service costs, leading to a Balance Sheet showing at the end of each financial year a detailed statement of the assets and liabilities of the hospital.

A new principle in hospital accounts, which will be introduced as a result of the application of the National Health Service Act, 1946, is the linking of expenditure with the Budget of the Ministry of Health and of the National Exchequer.

The necessity of estimating expenditure for periods of a year (such estimates having to be made approximately six months before the beginning of the year in question) has been borne in mind when making the recommendations contained in this report, and the methods suggested are those which it is considered will give most easily, accurate figures and the maximum information necessary for the financial control of the service.

The form of presenting accounts together with supporting statistical tables in general use at the present time, showing "average cost of each in-patient per week" and "cost per out-patient attendance," is, in the Committee's view, lacking in detail, as it attempts to reduce all hospital maintenance expenditure to two units of cost, namely, cost per bed and cost per out-patient attendance, and does not give sufficient information to enable satisfactory comparisons to be made between costs of comparable institutions.

Examination of statistical tables prepared by representative hospitals disclosed that the variance in costs is generally accounted for by such factors as (a) differing or additional ancillary and auxiliary services, (b) the arbitrary basis of allocating expenditure between in-patients and out-patients, (c) the difference in age and construction of buildings, e.g. pavilion or vertical unit, and (d) varied local conditions.

The General Income and Expenditure Account now recommended by the Committee obviates the differences caused by (a) and (b) in the above paragraph by disclosing the cost of each ancillary and auxiliary service, and by avoiding as far as possible the question of arbitrary apportionments. Where the nature of the expenditure is such that it can only be allocated to all departments on an arbitrary basis, it is shown as a separate service, e.g., Heating, Lighting and Water, and Laundry.

For the purpose of making detailed comparisons of costs of comparable departments (either contained within an institution or in several institutions) it is recommended that suitable units of costs be adopted. For example:—

Wards	Per In-Patient Day
Theatres	Per Operation
Diagnostic X-Rays	Per Attendance
Laboratory Services	Per Specimen

The Committee has divided the expenditure side of the General Income and Expenditure Account into three sections:—

(a) Direct Services:

Departments that are in direct contact with patients and which at the same time are common to most hospitals, i.e., the basic services.

(b) Indirect Services:

Departments that are not directly concerned with patients, but none the less are integral hospital services. (Provision has been made under this heading to meet the requirements of the large hospitals, although it is realised that some of the headings, e.g. Works Superintendent's Office, Training Schools, will not apply to every hospital.)

(c) Ancillary and Auxiliary Services:

Special departments or services that are not common to all hospitals.

Certain departments to be found in the large hospitals, and sometimes regarded as separate units, e.g. bakery, have not been shown as separate services in the General Income and Expenditure Account. The costs of these departments should be allocated to the other departments (including outside institutions for whom work might be performed) according to services rendered, as such expenditure is common to all hospitals, and hospitals without these internal services must purchase and allocate to the various departments at the "all in" contractor's price.

The Committee, aware of the difficulties experienced by small hospitals in the matters of accountancy, recommends that where the maintaining of records necessary to complete a fully detailed account would entail administrative difficulties, the condensed form of General Income and Expenditure Account could be used with the consent of the Ministry of Health. This, although giving essential information, amalgamates under each sub-heading like activities whilst at the same time disclosing the cost of expensive services.

The Committee has grouped income under six main sections, as shown in the General Income and Expenditure Account, and in making this recommendation has interpreted Section 52(2) of the National Health Service Act, 1946, as meaning that the net revenue from any special activity shall be paid into the Exchequer; but if it is the intention of the Minister of Health that the cost of running the department or activity is to be included in the hospital's budget of expenditure and the gross revenue paid over to the Exchequer, then the gross revenue should be given in the General Income and Expenditure Account and the departmental expenditure shown under Auxiliary and Ancillary Services on the opposite side. Income and expenditure in connection with projects of an exceptional nature, the subject of separate grants by the Ministry of Health, e.g., constructional work, special research, etc., or financed by trusts, legacies or donations for special hospital purposes or research should be accounted for separately and not brought into the General Income and Expenditure Account.

In addition to the above, a separate Income and Expenditure Account should be maintained for moneys received from the Hospital Endowments Fund, via the Minister of Health or the Regional Hospital Board, or received direct from investments standing in the names of the Board of governors or the Hospital Management Committee. Donations given to the hospital, other than those given for special purposes, or specifically for the maintenance of the hospital, would also be dealt with in this account.

In making its recommendations the Committee has assumed that, with the possible exception of small units attached for administrative purposes to larger hospitals, each hospital will be responsible for maintaining its own financial records.

The General Recommendations are followed by detailed notes on the income and expenditure account, the balance sheet, the income and expenditure account of special funds, the supplementary accounts and the working statements, all of which are fully illustrated by specimen forms and figures. A further section of the Report deals with financial records and accounts, salaries and wages and staff records, statistical returns, and stores accounting.

EMPLOYMENT RELATIONS IN A GROUP OF HOSPITALS

A Report of a Survey by the Department of Social Science of the University of Liverpool; Joan Woodward, M.A. Published by the Institute of Hospital Administrators, 75, Portland Place, London, W.1. Price 5s. (Published June, 1950.)

The report sets out the results of an investigation into employment relations in one of the groups of hospitals formed as a result of the reorganisation of the hospital service under the National Health Service Act. The survey was undertaken by the Social Science Department of the University of Liverpool at the request of the management committee of the Central Wirral Group of Hospitals, who wished to obtain a picture of the state of morale among their employees as a guide to them in personnel matters, but most of the problems examined are common to the majority of hospitals. The terms of reference were to examine the possibilities of developing a sound personnel policy, with particular regard to:

- (1) Adequate and objective methods of selection and placing of staff in work suitable to their ability.
- (2) Methods of training of staff to provide for internal promotions and promotion procedure generally.
- (3) Provision of good physical working conditions and suitable amenities.
- (4) Practical steps to avoid excessive hours of work, consistent with the adequate maintenance of the hospital service.
- (5) Right of access of staff to appropriate senior officers.
- (6) Disciplinary policy.
- (7) Use of joint consultation and other suitable methods to keep the staff informed on matters affecting their interests and to enable them to contribute to effective running of the service.

The survey was carried out principally by means of interviewing one in four of the whole hospital staff, nurses, domestic and ancillary workers. The principal recommendations, made with specific reference to the Central Wirral Group of Hospitals but having a wider relevance, were as follows:

Methods of selection of hospital staff should be based on a complete analysis of the work that the various grades are expected to perform. Responsibility for the preliminary selection of staff and for the administrative details of recruitment should be centralised.

Staff of all grades need a short period of induction to introduce them to the hospital. The promotion policy of the hospital should be clearly defined and should be understood by all the staff employed. Opportunities for promotion should be increased, if possible by the breaking down of more of the rigid barriers between occupational groups.

There should be a written code of procedure by which staff may lodge appeals, complaints or suggestions. The disciplinary policy of the management must be understood and accepted by the staff and there must be safeguards, in the form of a definite procedure through which breaches of discipline can be dealt with, so that the staff feel assured that penalties will not be applied arbitrarily.

The problem of achieving adequate participation of the staff in the management of the hospitals is the most serious difficulty of personnel management. Before the introduction of a joint consultative committee, it is essential for all grades of staff to agree on its purpose and constitution. The management must also decide at the outset how far the committee will be expected to participate in promulgating policy decisions, or in making them.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE HOSPITAL SERVICE

A Report of a Committee of the Institute of Hospital Administrators. Published by the Institute of Hospital Administrators, 75, Portland Place, London, W.1. Price 5s.

(Published July, 1951.)

The report was compiled by a committee of experienced hospital administrators drawn from various sections of the service, its object being to review progress made in the administration of hospitals since July, 1948, and to make recommendations for the future.

The committee worked to extensive terms of reference, and consequently the report covers a broad field, discussing amongst other subjects the functions of regional hospital boards, teaching hospitals, and hospital management committees, the membership of hospital bodies, the administration of the individual hospital, mental hospital services, hospital finance, hospital supplies, the external relationships of hospital authorities, and staffing problems.

Grouping of Hospitals

The report gives instances of the way in which the development of hospital groups has been inhibited by interference in matters of day-to-day administration by regional hospital boards, which were intended to be planning and co-ordinating bodies, but which in many cases—sometimes at the instance of the central authority—have concerned themselves deeply with matters properly within the sphere of the hospital management committee. Methods are suggested by which the latter would be enabled, in the words of the 1945 White Paper, to enjoy “a high degree of independence and autonomy within their own fields”.

In discussing principles of the grouping of hospitals the report points to the separate grouping and comparative isolation of mental hospitals and mental deficiency institutions, which is considered unfortunate. The suggestion is made that replanned mental hospitals and institutions should not exceed 1,000 beds, and should be so situated as to comprise component units of balanced general groups. Although such integration cannot be fully achieved until extensive planning and building can be undertaken, the report suggests that a start should be made in groups where circumstances permit integration, mental hospitals and institutions in the locality being brought within the appropriate group.

The case for and against the autonomy of teaching hospitals in England and Wales is stated, comparison being made with Scotland, where teaching hospitals are subject to the planning authority of the regional hospital boards. The report passes no final judgment on the strength of a comparatively short period of working, and recommends no change in either system for the present.

Members and Officers of Hospital Authorities

The report calls for periodical reviews of the basis of membership of hospital bodies by the appointing authority and for greater attention to be paid to the recommendations of boards and committees themselves. The difficult question of house committees is discussed, the report recognising that there will necessarily be wide variations in type, but stressing that whatever functions are allocated they should not be such as to enable house committees to exercise independent executive or financial powers.

The inter-relationships of the various categories of officer in the hospital service are discussed in a chapter of the report. Many problems were created by the inauguration of the new unified and comprehensive service in 1948, and an attempt is made to determine principles which would solve them. The proper rôle of the medical practitioner in relation to hospital administration is discussed, and the functions of a medical committee are defined.

The Individual Hospital and Public Relations

The great importance of the individual hospital is emphasised. “It is here, and virtually only here, that direct impact is made with the patient and the public generally.” The report deals with the various departments of hospital activity—finance, supplies, catering, medical records, engineering and maintenance, establishments, laundry and pharmacy—in relation to the work and problems of the individual hospital. It also contains a survey of the problems of hospital public relations, the view being taken that this is “a matter which affects every department of the work of the hospital”, calling for “an attitude of public-spirited helpfulness which . . . should not only exist but manifestly be shown to exist in all dealings of the hospital with the public or any part of it”.

Finance and Supplies

The principles of hospital finance receive careful attention. Having discussed the present rigid methods of expenditure control and compared them with early promises of financial flexibility through a system of global budgets, the report concludes that “both in principle and in detail there is much to criticise in the financial administration of the hospital service at the present time. The first necessity is a greater allocation of money. Along with it, and if necessary in anticipation of it, those responsible for financial control in the service must break away from the cumbersome shackles of governmental financial procedure and devise a means of achieving that flexibility and financial devolution which has never ceased to be an avowed aim of the service”.

Recognising that the reorganisation of 1948 has necessarily changed the basis of hospital purchasing, the report examines present methods, having regard particularly to central purchase, which has been introduced in some ranges of goods by the Supplies Division of the Ministry of Health. The larger pretensions of central purchase are rejected—“the existing system of purchase on a group basis is working satisfactorily as far as the majority of commodities are concerned”—but it is realised that a certain degree of central purchase, combined with carefully worked out standardisation, can be an advantage.

ORGANISATION OF HOSPITAL

OUT-PATIENT FACILITIES

Final Report of the Scottish Standing Advisory Committee on Hospital and Specialist Services

Summarised below are the main items covered by a sub-committee appointed by the Scottish Standing Advisory Committee on Hospital and Specialist Services "to consider and make recommendations as to the principles on which the provision of out-patient facilities at hospitals and associated clinics should be organised, with particular reference to the arrangements for reception and treatment of patients in comfort and without delay".

The report considers the function of an out-patient department to be primarily consultative having readily available at the request of a general practitioner the fullest resources of medical knowledge in all its branches, chiefly for consultation and advice, but in certain cases, such as follow-up after in-patient care, for treatment also. The value to the community of an efficient out-patient department in preventing diseases becoming so acute as to necessitate admission to hospital is emphasised.

It is suggested that the out-patient department, except in small hospitals, should be separate from the casualty department and that in planning it consideration should be given to the number and type of population in the area to be served, and also to the number of beds in the hospital to which the department is attached. As a reasonable guide to the requirements of a balanced economy it is mentioned that a ratio has been found to exist of 100 general beds to 50,000 out-patient attendances and also that one out of four out-patient attendances in general hospitals is in respect of a new patient. This clearly indicates the importance of diagnostic investigation in the out-patient department.

Construction and Design

The report describes in detail the accommodation which should be provided in out-patient departments and urges that for the convenience and comfort of the patient the customary large central waiting hall should be replaced by separate waiting rooms attached to each clinic.

In view of the considerable increases in out-patient attendances since the introduction of the National Health Service the opinion is expressed that out-patient departments should be so sited and architecturally designed as to permit expansion, whether horizontally or vertically or both, without disorganisation of other departments of the hospital. It also advocates flexibility of design so that, as needs change, existing accommodation can be easily adapted to meet a new emphasis. The report goes on to consider the relative merits of the three main types of out-patient department construction. The first of these, the "linked" type, is planned vertically, patients, after reception on the ground floor, being treated in self-contained out-patient units on upper floors each attached, and functioning as part of, the appropriate in-patient ward unit. The more usual layout is the "concentrated" out-patient department in which all the clinics are contained together in the hospital or in a separate building within its curtilage, this system having the advantage of easy expansion and adaptation. A third method, compromising between these two forms of construction, combines the essential advantages of the others in that the general, medical and all other non-specialist clinics are grouped together centrally, specialist clinics, however, being attached to the appropriate in-patient ward as in the "linked" system. The conclusions reached are that this method is the most economical in building costs and in staffing for any hospital of 200 or more beds, but it is considered that the "concentrated" layout is more appropriate to a small hospital providing that it is conveniently situated for the attendance of patients in the X-ray and other diagnostic departments.

Location

Although the general view is expressed that the out-patient department should be within the curtilage of the main hospital, it is realised that, particularly in Scotland, instances must occur in which it is more satisfactory to have a polyclinic away from the main hospital. The importance of locating out-patient departments conveniently to assist the patient and to ensure the co-operation of general practitioners is stressed and the whole question of the decentralisation of clinics, specialist and non-specialist, is discussed at length. The opinion is expressed that the eventual establishment of health centres will not noticeably reduce the number of attendances at out-patient departments since these already have been sifted fairly thoroughly so as to retain only cases requiring specialist attention. Regarding dispensing the view is stated that, in the ordinary way, prescriptions should not be dispensed at the main hospital, but that the consultant should report back to the general practitioner who then should prescribe the necessary drugs and dressings.

General Observations

The report goes on to discuss a variety of measures which may do much or do little to reassure the patient or to achieve the efficient running of the out-patients' department. Particular matters considered include the organisation of an appointments system, a sound system of record keeping, the reception of patients, the therapeutic and psychological value of good interior decoration, the provision of hospital accommodation for patients from the more remote parts of the surrounding districts and also the maintenance of close contact with general practitioners. The report concludes by stressing the need which faces hospital authorities of keeping constantly in mind the possibilities of improving the organisation and the administration of their out-patient departments.

RECEPTION AND WELFARE OF IN-PATIENTS IN HOSPITALS

Report by the Scottish Standing Advisory Committee on Hospital and Specialist Services. Published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, Edinburgh. Price 9d.

(Published September, 1951.)

The report, compiled as a result of the work of a small sub-committee set up in December, 1949, covers many aspects of the welfare of patients in hospitals. At the outset a strong plea is made for recognition of the fact that most patients cannot and should not after entering hospital "cease to be people with personalities, needs and interests of their own and become merely bodies".

The Committee recommends that written information should be provided for patients before they arrive in the wards and the contents of a letter in informal and personal terms which should be sent to a patient put on a waiting list for entry to a hospital is outlined. The information which it is suggested should be contained in this letter includes such matters as what the patient should bring with him in the way of toilet requisites, clothing, ration books, etc., the location of the hospital and communication to and from it, what money and valuables should be brought and whether they can be safely kept within the hospital, visiting arrangements and the name of the person to whom enquirers may write for information about the patient's condition.

The report also suggests that the patient should be given a brochure or leaflet containing a short description of the functions of the hospital and its part in the life of the community, an explanation of hospital routine, a list of mealtimes, particulars as to the scope of the almoner's work and the times of her availability to patients, welfare arrangements, names of chaplains, rules about smoking in wards, arrangements for the collection and delivery of mail and reasons why visiting periods and the number of visitors must be limited. In this way, it is felt that the patient will be helped to adjust himself to the new conditions under which he must live, whilst on the hospital side, the provision of such information should lessen the number of enquiries made of nursing and other hospital staff.

Dealing with non-emergency admissions, the report suggests that in large hospitals, patients on arrival should not have to report at the out-patients department. It also suggests that large hospitals confuse a patient's sense of direction and calls for adequate signposting and indicators. The plea is also made that hospital lifts, which are not always available for the use of patients, should be made available to them and especially, if at all possible, to old people.

With regard to visiting hours, the report stresses that these are not an interruption of the hospital routine, but a means by which the patient is kept in touch with the world he knows and understands. The question is considered in some detail by the compilers of the report, who conclude that such periods are sometimes inadequate. They suggest that in general, short and frequent visiting periods are the most satisfactory and on a matter of practical detail, the suggestion is made that normally there should be two chairs at each patient's bedside, two visitors appearing to be a normal quota. In spite of possible emotional difficulties, the report concludes that on balance, visits of parents and others to children's wards should be more frequent than in general they have tended to be.

Other matters dealt with are the need for gifts of magazines and books, arrangements for ward furnishings, occupational and diversional therapy and catering arrangements, about which a number of small but valuable suggestions are made.

The Institute of Hospital Administrators

THE Institute was founded in 1902 and incorporated in 1910 as the Incorporated Association of Hospital Officers. Until 1942 its membership was primarily confined to voluntary hospital officers but upon fusion in 1942 with the Incorporated Association of Clerks and Stewards of Mental Hospitals, which had been founded in 1904 and incorporated in 1932, membership was widened to embrace officers from all sections of the hospital service. At the same time the name of the association was changed to the Incorporated Association of Hospital Administrators. In 1945 the present title was adopted.

OBJECTS

The objects of the Institute are, inter alia, to promote the general welfare of those engaged in hospital administration; to provide for training and instruction in hospital administration; to conduct examinations and to grant certificates and diplomas to those professionally qualified, and to keep a register of such persons and generally to improve the professional standards of hospital administrators; to publish papers on hospital administration, including a journal connected with the objects of the Institute, and to provide facilities for the reading of papers, the delivery of lectures, and the collection and dissemination of professional information; to co-operate with hospitals and associations and bodies having objects similar to those of the Institute, and to make such representations as may be thought fit in matters affecting hospitals or hospital administrators; to establish and support, or aid in the establishment and support of any charitable or benevolent associations or institutions in any way connected with the purposes of the Institute or calculated to further its objects.

CONSTITUTION AND ACTIVITIES

Council

The Institute's affairs are managed by a Council consisting of the President, Immediate Past President, and Honorary Treasurer as ex officio members, twelve ordinary members, of whom one-third retire annually and are directly elected by the general body of members, one representative elected annually from each Region of the Institute in England and Wales and two representatives elected annually from the Scottish Division. All members of the Council must be Fellows or Associates.

Regions and Branches

For the purpose of furthering the objects of the Institute and facilitating the discussion of Institute business and professional matters generally, the Institute has fourteen regions in England and Wales, co-terminous with the areas for which regional hospital boards are constituted under the National Health Service Act, 1946, and a Scottish Division, covering the whole of Scotland.

All members of the Institute in Great Britain are entitled to be members of the Region or Division in which the hospital(s) at, or for the purposes of, which they are employed is situated. Each Region has a Regional Council consisting of the regional representative to the Institute Council as an ex officio member, one member nominated by the Institute Council, and twelve other members (Fellows or Associates) elected annually from among and by the members of the Region. Similarly in Scotland there is a Scottish Divisional Council. Within certain regions, where geographical and other considerations have rendered it necessary, the Region has been sub-divided into two or more Branches, each of which has its own Branch Committee and officers.

In addition to members, registered students who have been granted certain privileges of membership (see "Registered Students—Privileges of Membership" below) are also attached to Regions and Branches in the same way as members.

Activities

To carry out the objects mentioned above, the Institute, inter alia :—

- (i) holds conferences and other meetings from time to time in London and elsewhere at which papers on various aspects of hospital administration are read, and opportunities given for discussion and exchange of views on questions affecting hospital administration and those in the profession. In particular an annual conference is arranged which is usually held alternatively in London and the provinces in April or May. Likewise for the same purpose conferences, refresher courses and other meetings are regularly arranged by the Institute Regions and Branches.
- (ii) through its Council considers all matters affecting hospital administrators, their responsibilities, duties, status and conditions of service, making representations when necessary and desirable. The Institute is a constituent member of the Health Services Administrative and Clerical Staffs Whitley Council, on which it has three seats, and at the present time the Secretary of the Institute is Staff Side and Joint Secretary of the Council and also Staff Side and Joint Secretary of the Health Services General Whitley Council.

- (iii) through its Education Committee maintains a Register of Students and holds examinations in hospital administration, successful candidates on completing a prescribed period of approved hospital administrative service being eligible for election as Associate members.
- (iv) holds an annual summer school in hospital administration and from time to time arranges week-end and other courses.
- (v) from time to time publishes reports on various aspects of hospital administration, and in particular publishes the monthly journal The Hospital, and also The Hospitals Year Book and The Hospital Diary.
- (vi) co-operates with government departments and other bodies and organisations on matters affecting hospital administration.

MEMBERSHIP

The Institute has three classes of membership Fellowship, Associateship, and Ordinary Membership; but the last class of membership has been closed since 1942 and no further elections are made to it. Ordinary members are not eligible for election to membership of the Council or Regional Councils or Branch Committees.

Associateship

Election to Associateship is normally restricted to persons of the full age of 21 years who have passed the final professional examination of the Institute, or until further notice such alternative examination reasonably equivalent in standard as may be accepted by the Council, and have been in approved hospital administrative service for not less than five years.

Fellowship

Election to Fellowship is normally restricted to Associates (or persons eligible for election to Associateship) of the Institute who possess such further qualifications as are required by the Council, including at present a minimum of five years' service in an approved post as a senior administrative officer.

Designatory Letters

Fellows and Associates are respectively entitled to use the designatory letters, F.H.A. and A.H.A., and to describe themselves as Incorporated Hospital Administrators.

Applications for Membership

All applications for election to membership must be made on the prescribed form (obtainable from the Secretary of the Institute) and must be supported by the signatures, as proposer and seconder, of two Fellows of the Institute for election to Fellowship, and of either Fellows or Associates for election to Associateship.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

Annual subscriptions are as follows:—

Fellows	£3	3s.	0d.
Ordinary Members	£2	2s.	0d.

The financial year of the Institute runs from 1st October—30th September.

PUBLICATIONS

The Hospital

The monthly journal The Hospital is supplied gratis to members. The Hospital, incorporating The Hospital Gazette, first published in 1904, and the Journal of the Incorporated Association of Clerks and Stewards of Mental Hospitals, first published in 1913, is devoted primarily to matters of interest to hospital administrators. Regular features include authoritative articles dealing with hospital policy, planning, construction, and administration, including finance, equipment, maintenance, supplies, personnel management, and law, together with reviews of recent books and official publications, and news of hospital activities and developments in this and other countries. Reports of the work of regional hospital boards and such bodies as King Edward's Hospital Fund and the Nuffield Provincial Hospitals Trust are also regularly published, as are a monthly index of official circulars and advertisements of vacant posts.

Although The Hospital is the official organ of the Institute, and as such publishes regular reports of Institute activities, it is the Institute's policy to encourage the free expression of ideas through the journal and to maintain it as a virtually independent as well as authoritative vehicle of opinion and information in the hospital field.

The Hospital may be obtained by non-members of the Institute from the publishers (at 75, Portland Place, London, W.1) or through newsagents; single copies 2s. (post free 2s. 3d.); annual subscription 24s. (post free).

The Hospitals Year Book

The Institute also publishes The Hospitals Year Book incorporating Burdett's Hospitals and Charities, founded in 1889.

The Hospital Diary

Another publication of the Institute is The Hospital Diary, which is specially designed for the use of administrative, medical, nursing and other officers engaged in hospital and nursing home administration and management.

Other Publications

In addition to the foregoing regular publications, the Institute from time to time publishes reports on matters relating to hospital organisation and administration. Recent publications of this kind include the Report of the Joint Committee on Hospital Accounts; Employment Relations in a Group of Hospitals—A Report of a Survey by the Department of Social Science of the University of Liverpool; The Administration of the Hospital Service—a report of a Committee of the Institute of Hospital Administrators; Road Accident Patients—Recovery of Costs of Treatment under the Road Traffic Acts.

EXAMINATIONS

Responsibility for the organisation and conduct of the Institute's examinations and maintenance of the Register of Students is vested in the Education Committee of the Institute. This Committee, in addition to Institute members, comprises representatives of the following authorities and organisations :—

- The Ministry of Health
- The Ministry of Pensions
- The Board of Control
- The Department of Health for Scotland
- The Regional Hospital Boards
- The Boards of Governors of Teaching Hospitals
- Hospital Management Committees and Boards of Management
- The Staff Side of the National Health Service Administrative and Clerical Staffs Whitley Council
- The Joint University Council for Social Studies
- King Edward's Hospital Fund for London.

Admission to the Examinations

Admission to the examinations—Intermediate and Final—is restricted to persons on the Institute's Register of Students or members registered for the examination under similar regulations as apply to the Register of Students.

Register of Students

Admission to the Register is restricted to persons who, having reached the age of 16 years, produce evidence of a satisfactory standard of general education in the form of one of the following examination certificates :—

1. A final degree examination of any University of the British Empire.
2. A diploma or intermediate degree examination of any University of the United Kingdom.
3. The Higher School Certificate examination of any University or joint University examination board of the United Kingdom.
4. The Matriculation examination of any University of the United Kingdom.
5. The School Certificate examination of any University or joint University examination board of the United Kingdom.
6. The General Certificate of Education examination of any University or joint University examination board of the United Kingdom, providing it fulfils the conditions set out in the Examination Regulations and Syllabus.

Exemption from the production of a certificate of having passed one of the foregoing examinations may in special circumstances be made.

A fee of £1 1s. is payable for registration.

Intermediate Examination

The Intermediate examination is divided into two parts, either of which may be taken first, or both may be taken together, and is open to all persons on the Register who have reached the age of 18 by the first day of the month in which the examination is held and who have been admitted to the Register on or before the 15th March.

The subjects of the examination are as follows :—

PART I

1. Public Administration, Central and Local
2. Elements of Economics.
3. The Hospital and Health Services—Historical and General.

PART II

Three of the following :—

4. Office Organisation and Method.
5. Elementary Commercial Law.
6. Book-keeping.
7. Statistics.

Exemption may be granted from subjects of the Intermediate examination to candidates who have passed a university or other public or professional examination approved for this purpose by the Education Committee.

Final Examination

The Final examination is divided into two parts, either of which may be taken first, or both may be taken together. It is open to all persons on the Register who, having attained the age of 21 years, have passed, or been exempted from, all subjects of the Intermediate examination, and at the time of the examination have completed not less than three years approved hospital administrative service.

The subjects of the examination are as follows :—

PART I

1. Hospital Administration (2 papers).
2. Hospital Finance (1 paper).
3. General Law affecting Hospitals (1 paper).

PART II

Three papers from the following :

4. Accountancy (2 papers).
5. Cost Accounts (1 paper).
6. Principles of Hospital Planning, Construction and Equipment (including Maintenance). (1 paper.)
7. Hospital Supplies (2 papers).
8. Personnel Management (1 paper).
9. Lunacy and Mental Treatment and Mental Deficiency Law. (1 paper)

No exemption is granted from any part of the Final examination.

A candidate who has passed the final examination may offer himself on a subsequent occasion for examination in additional Part II subjects.

Date of Examinations

The Intermediate and Final examinations normally commence on the first Monday in June unless that day is Whit Monday, when they usually start a week later.

The examinations are held in London and such provincial centres as may be arranged.

The fee for the whole of either the Intermediate or of the Final examination is £5 5s. or for either part separately, £2 12s. 6d. When a candidate is allowed to present himself for re-examination in a single subject the fee is £1 11s. 6d. The fee for examination in supplementary Part II (Final) subjects is 10s. 6d. per subject.

The closing date for entry to any of the examinations is 15th March preceding the holding of the examination.

Mr. A. H. Coughtrey, F.H.A.

Hon. Treasurer :

Mr. E. C. Ayling, F.H.A.
 " Ferncot," Shrewsbury Road,
 Redhill, Surrey.

The object of the Fund is to afford assistance to necessitous persons who, briefly, are

- members of the Institute of Hospital Administrators,
- former members of the Institute whose names have been retained on the Register of members up to within five years of their first application for assistance,
- dependants of the above persons or of any deceased member of the Institute.

The management of the Fund consists of a Committee comprising the President of the Institute of Hospital Administrators, the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman of the Council of the Institute, ex officio, a delegate from each Region of the Institute, an Hon. Treasurer and Hon. Secretary and six elected representatives of the voting contributors.

Annual Subscribers of not less than 5s. shall have one vote for every 5s. subscribed during the year in which a general meeting is held. Donors of not less than £5 5s. in one payment shall have one vote for life for every £5 5s. given.

The Committee commends the objects of the Fund and its work to all members of the Institute with the hope that all members support the Fund by an annual subscription.

A. WANDER LTD. BY APPOINTMENT
'OVALTINE' MANUFACTURERS TO THE LATE KING GEORGE VI.

Quality Products from the House of Wander

IN order to maintain the general excellence of Wander preparations, effort is not spared to apply systematically the latest discoveries of scientific research. Raw materials are selected, manufacturing processes devised, and scientific control applied all with the same object in view. The 'Ovaltine' Research Laboratories, where Wander products are constantly under active investigation and development, are amongst the best of their kind, and are staffed by fully qualified scientists.

The 'Ovaltine' Factory in a Country Garden is considered to be the ideal of what a food factory should be. Here the highest standards of hygiene are observed in the interests of quality and purity.

The following are a few of the many well-known Wander Products :

OVALTINE

The world's most popular food beverage. Because of its nutritive value and ease of digestibility 'Ovaltine' is the food beverage most widely used in Hospitals and Nursing Homes. It is useful in cases of difficult feeding.

'AMINACYL'

PAS CACHETS 1.5 and 2.0gm.

'Aminacyl' Cachets of Calcium PAS and of Sodium PAS are now available, thus augmenting the established Wander range of PAS specialities which includes bulk powder, dragées, ampoules and granulate. 'Aminacyl' Cachets are well tolerated, reliably bacteriostatic and convenient for hospital and domiciliary use.

'ASMAC' Tablets

Because it provides, in a single tablet, sedative, spasmolytic and expectorant drugs of reputable performance, 'Asmac' is now established as a valuable prescription in the symptomatic control of bronchial asthma. Dispensing packs of 100, 500 and 1,000 available to Hospitals.

VIMALTOL

A delicious, concentrated vitamin food prepared from malt extract, yeast and Halibut Liver Oil, fortified with additional vitamins and minerals, and acceptably flavoured with orange juice.

'Vimaltol' is a source of important nutrients in health, and a valuable vitamin supplement in illness and convalescence. It is a particularly convenient and acceptable form for daily administration to hospitalized children and adolescents.

MALT & OIL (Wander Brand)

A product of outstanding pharmaceutical excellence, 'Wander Brand' Malt and Oil comprises malt extract specially prepared by A. Wander Ltd. (acknowledged as leading authorities on its manufacture), the finest obtainable cod liver oil, and vitamin content exceeding B.P. minimum standards for analogous preparations. This product is pre-eminently suitable for hospital use because of its delightful taste. Available to Hospitals at specially arranged prices.

Over 70,000 beds in U.K. Hospitals have Dunlopillo mattresses

Today, the DUNLOPILLO mattress is accepted as essential equipment in the hospital, the nursing home and the sick room. Here are four good reasons for this:

The Dunlopillo mattress is—

HYGIENIC

COMFORTABLE

No seams, no buttons, does not sag or lump. Self-ventilating and gently supporting.

ECONOMICAL

No maintenance cost of remaking.
No replacement costs.

CONVENIENT

Never needs turning, light in weight and easily handled.

Wall's

... A PURE AND NOURISHING FOOD FOR THE HOSPITAL DIETARY

Ice Cream is providing an increasing number of Hospitals with an interesting item on the dietary. It is particularly valuable in providing variation and has the advantage of quick and simple service.

Served by itself or in conjunction with fruit or other puddings it has a psychological as well as nutritive value in the patients' dietary. Many Hospitals also serve Ice Cream to their staff in the Staff Canteen.

Wall's unique organisation of distribution through their local Depots in all parts of Great Britain, thence through the special Refrigerators installed by them in the Hospital, keeps the Ice Cream in perfect hygienic condition.

Full details of the scheme will be provided on application to

FOR CURTAINED CUBICLES SPECIFY TUBERAIL

- For many years we have made a special study of the division of wards, physiotherapy departments, etc. into cubicles as regards the track and also the provision of specially suitable fabrics.
- In 1937 we designed the special light alloy rail which incorporates tube and curtain rail in one extrusion—TUBERAIL.
- Strengthened and fully developed to meet all the needs of modern hospital practice, we have successfully installed the new TUBERAIL in over 200 Hospital Wards.
- Silent runners are now available.
- TUBERAIL is not only efficient—its quality, finish and especially neat suspension add to the appearance of the Ward.
- Special developments in making up and hanging curtains save time, wear and tear, laundry costs and Linen Room space.
- Our planning service has to date met and overcome almost every conceivable difficulty in layout and fixing. It is at your disposal.

Complete furnishing of Nurses' Homes, Visitors' Waiting Rooms, Out-patient Departments, etc.

Our Studio Service provides schemes of colour for decoration complementary to our furnishings without charge.

THE IDEAL FILLING FOR HOSPITAL BEDDING

For nearly fifty years Lyxhayr has been used as a bedding filling by numerous hospitals and institutions. Its popularity is continually growing not only because of the many advantages even here, but also because it is the most economical quality filling available to-day.

TESTING SAMPLE. We will gladly send sufficient Lyxhayr for making up a trial mattress which you can submit to any desired tests. No obligation is entailed.

● Lyxhayr is a curled vegetable fibre filling of exceptional resilience.

● Hygienic and insect proof.

● Very durable. Can be repeatedly stoved and remade.

● Contains no animal fat.

● Far less hygroscopic than animal hair.

● Very light weight. Only 24 lbs. (approx.) required for 3 ft. by 6 ft. mattress.

An increasingly important factor in the treatment of

PEPTIC ULCER • SKIN DISORDERS

WOUNDS AND FRACTURES

FATIGUE AND ASTHENIC STATES

GUM INFECTIONS

In all these conditions valuable results from the use of natural Vitamin C in the form of RIBENA are constantly being reported—even in obstinate cases. RIBENA is the pure undiluted juice of fresh ripe blackcurrants with fruit sugar, cane sugar and glucose. It is delicious to take and, being freed from all cellular structure of the fruit, will not upset the most delicate stomach. It is exceptionally rich in natural Vitamin C (not less than 20 mgm. per fluid ounce) and associated factors.

Please send for sample of RIBENA and copy of "Blackcurrant Juice in Modern Therapy"—free.

FLOORS HYGIENICALLY POLISHED IN MINUTES— Hours of Staff Time Saved

You can save countless hours of laborious work — keep short-handed staff happy — and have floors polished to hygienic perfection this easy way! Simply invest in a Vactric 3-Brush Floor Polisher. The Vactric polishes floors by itself — all the user does is steer! Its 3 brushes, revolving at tremendous speed, impart a higher gloss in minutes than hours of hand polishing could achieve. The Vactric will help solve staff problems, and make financial savings in your hospital. Ask your dealer to demonstrate, or write for details to address below.

5 STAR FEATURES

- 1 Vactric's new heavy-duty motor enables polisher to operate CONTINUOUSLY for long periods over large surface areas.
- 2 The 3 easy-to-remove REVOLVING brushes produce quiet, high-speed polishing in MINUTES!
- 3 Equipped with 3 detachable felt polishers, this economical machine imparts a MIRROR-LIKE finish on parquet, linoleum, marble tiling, stained boards and other surfaces.
- 4 The scientifically designed triangular base ensures efficient and effortless polishing in all awkward corners.
- 5 The ample flex and easy finger-tip operation enable the user to STEER this labour-saving electrical polisher with the minimum of physical effort.

Hospital sterilisation of bedding, clothing and mattresses by the Bacterol Process has long been accepted as the most efficient, most economical method yet evolved. By the pressure vaporisation of Bacterol Fluid, a rapid bactericidal action of great penetrative power is effected on the entire contents of the sterilisation chamber. Disinfection and disinfestation of the widest possible variety of articles can be successfully carried out without risk of the slightest damage being caused to them. Ideally safe and simple to operate, Bacterol Sterilisers require no additional plant and are remarkably inexpensive to run.

★ The Bacterol Maintenance Service, staffed by experienced technicians, is at the immediate disposal of Bacterol Steriliser users throughout the country. Regular inspections and overhauls can be arranged at most moderate rates.

The WILLIAMS Electrically-Heated Cot

prematurely - born and weakly babies

Regd. design No. 847108

Primarily designed as a reception cot for use in Labour Wards, the Williams cot is particularly useful where resuscitation coupled with warmth is important.

It dispenses with the additional work and dangers involved in the use of hot-water bottles.

The heating element is thermostatically controlled, so that the temperature of the mattress and the bedding can be maintained at a uniform pre-determined level anywhere within the range of 60-100 degrees F.

Visitors Day...

The 1952 Hotelympia provided us with an excellent opportunity of renewing old acquaintanceships, of making new friends—and of learning something about them by discussing their catering problems.

We are proud to number a great many Hospitals and Institutions amongst our customers and friends. We value their good opinions of the quality of our Foods, their approval of our hygienic, economic and convenient-size packs, which provide the greatest possible value for the bulk user, and we are happy that so many of them have taken full advantage of the special terms we offer to Hospitals and Institutions.

Full details, prices and samples of "Three Cooks" Soups, Dessert Gelatine, Home Style Gravy maker, Custard, Pudding and Pancake mixtures will gladly be sent on request, and we shall, at all times, be happy to help you.

Falkirk

Cooking Equipment is

TOUGH - EFFICIENT - MODERATELY PRICED

-just what hospital catering needs!

THE FALKIRK IRON COMPANY makes a wide and distinguished range of Heavy Duty Cooking Equipment, designed to burn every normal kind of fuel and to serve communities of every size. Its construction is remarkably robust, its price is moderate, and delivery is quicker than you might have feared.

Here are two excellent examples

THE GII MEDIUM DUTY GAS RANGE

The oven has a capacity of $7\frac{1}{2}$ cu. ft. and is insulated on all sides (including the doors) to prevent waste of heat. It has a mercury thermometer and can be provided with a thermostat.

The sturdy

DOUBLE OVEN 'FALCO' ELECTRIC RANGE

Type 6612 shows the method of building up single units to size required.

Supplies Essential B₂ Vitamins

Two essentials that are always foremost in the minds of those responsible for obtaining supplies for large organizations are economy and the quality of the material. When ordering foods the quality must not be overlooked, particularly when the feeding of hospital patients is under consideration.

Among the nutrients that are specially important are the B₂ vitamins. Marmite has proved remarkably useful as a source of these vitamins and, because it is a concentrated extract, it is economical to use.

Special packs and terms are available for hospitals, and special quotations will be made for contracts.

CERAMIC FILTERS for Clarifying and Sterilizing

Removing calcium carbonate and excess lime from a saturated solution, using a Doulton F10 filter candle.

For the removal of gross impurities from medicinal or other solutions and for the sterilization of heat-labile preparations, Doulton filters offer important advantages. These include:

- Robustness, and resistance to sudden pressure changes.
- Suitability for use with positive or negative pressure.
- Chemical inertness, guarding against filtrate contamination.
- Ability to withstand repeated autoclaving.
- Provision of filtrates of optical clarity.
- Easily tested by the 'bubbling pressure test'.
- Available in fast and medium grades for clarifying; fast, medium and slow grades for sterilizing.

BEHIND THE SCENES

The photograph shows a small Cherry Tree team—part of one of our recent installations, consisting of an Ozonic Washing Machine, a 26" Hydro Extractor, an Ozone Tumbler, and a 30-gallon soap boiler.

THE work of the most brilliant surgeon can be offset by bad nursing; good nursing depends upon absolute efficiency behind the scenes.

We at Cherry Tree have been manufacturing all kinds of laundry and dry-cleaning machinery for over 80 years, and have a long experience of the needs of hospitals in this particular aspect of "behind the scenes" activities. Whether you want a single washing machine or a complete installation, just get into touch with us and one of our technical experts will come along, discuss the problem and give the best possible advice.

Preferably B.D.H.

The introduction of new B.D.H. medical products is preceded by searching laboratory and clinical investigation; thus is their reliability confirmed. Their purity is assured by analytical control of the most stringent nature applied at each progressive stage in manufacture. Wide experience in packing and transportation ensures that careful manufacture and elegant finish are fittingly matched by safe transit.

BLICK 'CLIP'

are specially suitable for use in Hospitals because the 'Clip' Mechanism overcomes the difficulty that arises where some workers are coming on duty whilst others are going off.

BLICK can supply and install any of a wide range of Time Recorder Models —either Mechanically or Electrically driven.

Also

BLICK Master Control Systems

BLICK Staff Locating Systems

BLICK Watchman's Control Systems

Blick wood-cased Model 65

* * * * *

Amongst the many hospitals that use BLICK equipment are:

St. Helier Group, Paddington Group, Royal Free Hospital, Royal Hospital Richmond, Royal Northern Hospital, Queen Mary's Hospital, Battersea General Hospital, Glasgow Royal Infirmary, Darenth & Stone Hospital, Redhill County Hospital, Liverpool Hospital.

We shall be very pleased to send you full particulars and quotation.

I'M MIGHTY PROUD . . .

Proud to handle a machine that does all the important jobs—built for that kind of service by the inventors of the stencil duplicating process.

Perfect copies, a smooth, silent performance, complete reliability . . . handling a Gestetner means all of those things—and I'm mighty proud of mine!

COLOUR THERAPY

Every Hospital can benefit from the skilful use of paint. Psychologically sound colour schemes can lighten wards, encourage cheerfulness and speed recovery. In surgeries and operating theatres, washable, glossy painted surfaces remain protective and sterile, materially assisting the constant battle against dust and germs. We, as Manufacturers of High Grade Paint, offer to all Hospitals, Health Centres and Surgeries, the benefit of our Colour Advisory Service. Make your paint both play and look the part.

Simplified installations for hospital dental laboratories

WITH ASH DENTAL LABORATORY EQUIPMENT

Modern
Unit manner

Ready-made laboratory units that can be installed to any combination in any shape or size of room. Speedily fitted together by unskilled labour. Seven basic units as illustrated above. Solidly constructed from selected hardwoods and finished in a monomer resistant, cream-coloured plastic paint. All working surfaces covered with 'Formica' plastic—acid and heat proof.

Ethicon, of course

THEATRE SISTERS AND SURGEONS all over the world agree that only first-rate material can be considered for use in the operating theatre

. that is why 'Ethicon' Catgut, Mersutures, Mersilk and other specialities are so often specified. Constant research into new techniques has established Ethicon's position as leaders in the field—and it is a wise precept to "Look to the Leaders for Leadership."

Occupational Therapy is a treatment which has only within recent years been used by the medical profession in hospitals.

By means of handicraft requiring varying degrees of attention and skill, occupation helps the patient's escape from the boredom of inactivity and from depression, to improved physical health.

Needlecraft for Occupational Therapy by Penelope was adopted for the purpose in Allied hospital and Units throughout the World, and was worked by many thousands of Service men and women.

Supplies are still available for the requirements of patients in Service and Civilian hospitals, sanatoria, institutions, etc. Particulars regarding the conditions of supply are obtainable upon application.

INDEX TO HOSPITAL AUTHORITIES

N.B. References in Roman type are to the hospital directory sections (i.e., Sections 4, 5, 6 and 10) those in italics are to the bed and patient statistics section (i.e., Section 8). Where a hospital authority has changed its name since the last edition of the Hospitals Year Book, the old title has been retained in the index, the new title also being inserted; the former title will be deleted in the next edition. For index to individual hospitals, see page 1347.

PAINTS for Hospital decoration and preservation

NEOFEX ENAMEL FINISH

The proved durable protective coating. Withstands years of washing down in Hospital wards, corridors, etc.

Supplied in Interior and Exterior grades, each formulated to give the best performance in the conditions to which the film is subjected.

Use MURAGLOSS for laundries, kitchens etc., where surfaces have previously been limewashed. Even on the heaviest lime deposits one coat of Undercoat and one coat of MURAGLOSS Gloss Paint produces a finish both durable and hygienic.
